This is the first part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in linguistics. It aims to introduce students to the nature of language and the major domains of linguistic inquiry as well as its basic concepts, principles and tools in the following areas: Phonetics, Phonology, Morphology and Lexical Semantics. They will - excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions, - test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions, - clarify questions in class, and - complete assignments in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies. Please note that this course is offered by different instructors on different time slots every week. We also offer it in 2 different formats: 1) instructor-guided tuition (groups 3+4) with obligatory reading before class on the basis of guiding questions so that the session content can be collected interactively in class vs. 2) inverted-classroom format (groups 1+2) with the session content available as online material before the session, so that more of the in-class time can be used to settle questions. Both formats offer plenty of exercises before and in class. You may choose from these what suits you best in terms of both time slots and formats. There will be quizzes and a mock exam. Students are encouraged to acquire a copy of the textbook (see below) before the beginning of the semester. Tutorials (which provide you with further practice) will be announced at the beginning of the semester. It is strongly recommended that students attend one of these tutorials regularly. We strongly recommend attending this course in parallel with part II. Please register for this course in moodle for access to the course materials. The official registration is required via PULS.

This is the second part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in linguistics. In this course, students will learn about aspects of syntax, i.e. how phrases, clauses, and sentences are formed. They

- excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions,
- test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions,
- clarify questions in class, and
- complete assignments, which also include an application task, for each subtopic

in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies.

Please note that this course is offered by different instructors on different time slots every week. We also offer it in 2 different formats:

2) inverted-classroom format (groups 2+3) with the session content available as online material before the session, so that more of the in-class time can then be used to settle questions.

Both formats offer plenty of exercises before and in class. You may choose these what suits you best in terms of both time slots and formats.

There will be e-assignments and a mock exam.

Please follow the "comment" link above for more information on comments, course readings, course requirements and grading. The course offers an introduction to the history of the English language from its origins to the present day. It explores the linguistic roots of English, the changes in pronunciation and loss of inflections, as well as the enormous expansion in vocabulary which characterizes the development of English. We will also consider the different varieties of English in evidence today and the similarities and dissimilarities between English and other Germanic languages. Among the difficulties encountered by ESL/EFL students are the English system of tenses as well as the discrepancy between spelling and pronunciation: these will all be dealt with in this series of lectures.

This course will consider the development of English in the period 1100-1500 - so-called Middle English. Representative texts will be used to illustrate the linguistic characteristics of the language in this period. The course will also deal with the emergence of Middle English in the 12th century as well as the rise of a standard written language in the 14th and 15th centuries and the implications for the later development of the language. It is recommended that course participants are attending the lecture series An Introduction to the History of English, or have attended in a previous semester.

Sociolinguistics deals with the social life of language, language in its sociocultural context. It is a branch of linguistics that looks at how our words and sentences are influenced by the society around us, for instance, how the accent or the dialect we use has been shaped by where we come from or which social status group we belong to. In this introductory course we will examine the role of language in a variety of social contexts, considering both how language works and how it can be used to signal and interpret various aspects of social identity.

Please follow the "comment" link above for more information on comments, course readings, course requirements and grading. Not only in linguistics, the ubiquity of metaphor is a well-established fact. This seminar will acquaint students with conceptual metaphor theory – arguably the most widely accepted theory of metaphor – and its extensions (cultural model and blending theory). The course will, for the most part, follow Kövecses (2010), and cover, inter alia, the basic concepts of conceptual metaphor theory, the universality of metaphors vs. cultural specificity, and metaphoric systems. Students will be asked to do their own metaphor analyses and present their findings in class.

This course draws on students prior knowledge of linguistics (pronunciation, lexis, grammar) to explore how speakers of English as a foreign language make use of their evolving linguistic resources in spoken or written interaction. Students will learn to 1) apply the linguistic concepts and notions learned in the introductory courses to the description of real-world L2 English spoken and written data 2) identify issues regarding how linguistic resources are mobilized by L2 speakers 3) reflect on how classroom instruction may help L2 users improve their linguistic repertoires.

This foundational course draws on the phonetic, morphological, lexical, semantic and syntactic description as trained in the introductory module and pursues linguistic description at the level of (written) text and (spoken) discourse. Text(s) and discourse(s) are viewed functionally as ways of communicating and interacting with addressees. Their meaning, or interpretation, is heavily dependent upon context. We will examine a number of structural and organizational principles common to both text and discourse production, have a closer look at the context(s) in which they are produced, and we will consider specific aspects of text and discourse description including communicative genres and conversational structure.

As participants will learn in this seminar, crime and detection in nineteenth-century (British) literature are about much more than just Sherlock Holmes. Rather, they will explore the development of and changing attitudes towards crime, policing, and the detective. They will meet familiar faces - Poe's Dupin, Collins's Sergeant Cuff and of course Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes - and they will investigate the British nation's fascination with both real and fictional murder, theft, and the criminal him-/herself in a century of social change and social challenges. The aim of this seminar is, to provide participants with an understanding of the many facets of crime and detection narratives, of their roots in and connection to the society that produced and devoured them, as well as of the legacy these narratives have left over the decades that followed.

This course will be reading-intensive and regular attendance, as well as active participation in class, are expected.

Leistungsnachweis2/3 ECTS

Either:

You will be expected to write an essay of approx. 4,000 words. Throughout the seminar you will learn to formulate a thesis, develop a structure, research the appropriate literature, and, in the end, produce said essay, which will be concerned with an aspect of the topic in general or a specific sub-topic we discuss. Said thesis, structure, and literature choice will have to be handed in over the course of the semester so that you can develop your essay as we move through the topic. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

Or:

You will be expected to give a presentation, the topic/format of which will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar. Only a limited number of presentation slots are available. The presentation should not exceed 20 mins and should lead to a class discussion. If you are a teacher trainer student, we may discuss other formats of presentation. Your presentation structure and handout will have to be discussed with me before the presentation takes place. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Again, further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

In addition to either of this, you are expected to prepare for each session to enable you to take part in in-class discussions and exercises. You will also be encouraged to provide feedback to others while you yourself will also be given feedback by members of the class.

6 ECTS

If you are taking this course as a 'b-Seminar' you will be required to write an additional module paper of approx. 6,000 words. This may or may not be connected to the topic of this course. If you plan on writing this module paper, please approach me before or after class or send me an email with an idea of the topic you would like to discuss.

California occupies a prominent place in the public imagination, whether in the USA or abroad be it for its Indigenous population, its history as part of a Spanish colony and then a Mexican territory, its (misleading and politically charged) symbolic value as the end of expansion for the USA, for the Gold Rush, the 1960s, the Black Panthers, the Occupation of Alcatraz, for LA and Hollywood, for San Francisco and Silicon Valley, for Death Valley and the Yosemite National Park, for Arnold Schwarzenegger, for countless songs, movies, and novels. This course will examine different depictions of the golden state from relatively contemporary novels - as the site for California Dreaming (whatever that means), for resistance, for individualism, for counterculture, for immigration, for discrimination, for gentrification, for pollution, for crime and for violence.

Violence, its representation and consumption is omnipresent in U.S. American culture. It lies at the heart of the very foundational myths that constitute American national identity. In fact violence has been variously described as an inherent part of the formation of nation states. Today, violence has lost most of its beneficial ascriptions and its rejection has become the epitome of civilization. Nonetheless, the spectacle of violence fascinates today as much as it did in the past (a phenomenon which perpetually startles scholars). But what really is violence? And what role do aesthetics play in the meaning and understanding of violence? A first and crucial part of this seminar will be to distinguish conceptually between the different forms of violence that we will be talking about. Starting with theories of violence, the course will attempt to trace violence as cultural performance and practices through various stages of U.S. history. Our seminar readings and discussions will focus on the different understandings and representations of violence in texts that span from the colonial era to the present and explore the politics and aesthetics of such representations. We will read excerpts from scholars such as Walter Benjamin, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, Susan Sontag, Judith Butler, Richard Slotkin, Wolfgang Sofsky, and J.P. Remtsma.

The last decades have seen an upsurge of autobiographical writing as well as of multimedia self-presentations by disabled persons. This seminar focuses on female British authors' verbal, graphic and digital autobiographies which depict life stories shaped by physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities. "Disability" will be introduced as a fluid, intersectional identity category (a category intersecting with gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity/race) that challenges the binary opposition between "disabled" and "non-disabled", "normal" or "able-bodied". The seminar deals with the broader subject of disability as a new category in cultural and literary studies as well as with disability autobiography as a multimedia genre. We will analyse verbal, graphic and digital forms of autobiographies by investigating their narrative structures and by exploring them as creative responses to the ableist, mentalist, sexist, racist and heteronormative representations of women with physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities in medical discourse and the media. Furthermore, we discuss if (and how) the self-presentations in different media produce and perform unexpected, novel, controversial and strongly interactive images of bio- and neurodiversity.

The course introduces into a period of crucial transition in Britain from the early 20th to the 21st century, a century of immense, thorough social, political, cultural changes, challenges and threats. We will focus on social, cultural and literary phenomena and follow up some major developments throughout the 20th century. Modernism, World War I/II, Cold War are only a few keywords that relate to this course project and find repercussions in a wide range of partly controversial experimental and avantgarde trends in arts (incl. literature). In literature, this primarily relates to a rejection of 19th-century traditions and conventions and a termination of the previous consensus between author and reader in traditional realism. Modernists, then, regarded themselves as a cosmopolitan avantgarde subverting bourgeois values. This subversion was expressed both in complex formal experiment and in provocative subject matter such as urban cultural dislocation. The realism-based continuity of chronological development was challenged; new ways of tracing the flow of characters' thoughts found expression in the stream-of-consciousness technique. Complex collages of fragmentary images substituted allusions to logical, teleological exposition of thoughts and can be read as repercussions of the writers' alert awareness of new anthropological and psychological theories. The trauma of World War I and II and the Holocaust as well as the Cold War left repercussions in the arts too, for sure and certainly contributed to the development of postmodernist aesthetics. During the course, we will problematise aspects of these transitions. We will look (a) into concepts of modernism/postmodernism and (b) investigate into innovative (post)modernist aesthetic impulses in canonical and noncanonical texts/writers. Changing gender concepts as well as aspects of representations of the British Empire will be of reoccurring interest.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Waste is generally understood as the mundane, worthless, redundant and discarded afterwards of how we live our lives. In recent years, however, there has been an increasing scholarly interest in how societies relate to waste. Building on this research, this seminar takes as a starting point the fact that we spend a good amount of time in our #ordinary# lives managing waste, and that the problem of how we manage waste is at the heart of the environmental crisis and the development of more sustainable futures. Exploring that which is rejected, we will investigate waste as a dynamic category that needs to be understood in relation to the modern contexts in which it is most commonly found and transformed, and the relationships in which it is embedded. We will also address contemporary innovative practices of reuse, recycling and re#purposing. Through such cultures of renewal, waste products not only acquire a new value and function, but they also become entangled in new social relations and material practices. Waste and garbage thus become metonymic devices for conveying crucial insights into contemporary culture.

Die Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften bringen in Kontakt: Text und Welt, Text und Theorie, Text und Bild, Texte verschiedener Sprachen, Epochen, kultureller Dispositive... 'Komparatistisches' Arbeiten gehört in den Geisteswissenschaften zum täglich Brot. Wie schon im Namen Kom-paratistik eingeschrieben, ist diese Praxis getragen von einem unhintergehbaren MITEINANDER – nicht nur von Abstrakta wie 'Texten' oder 'Disziplinen', sondern von Menschen, ihren Projekten und Interessen, ihrer je eigenen Ansteckungskraft und Empfänglichkeit für das ihnen Begegnende. Die Ringveranstaltung soll eine Stätte bieten, die Potsdamer komparatistischen Kontaktflächen über die Disziplinen hinweg gemeinsam zu erleben und auszuprobieren. In regelmäßigem Rhythmus werden Kolleg*innen aus den verschiedenen Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften (AVL, Anglistik, Germanistik, Romanistik, Slavistik) ihre je spezifische komparatistische Kontaktfläche vorstellen. Die Wochen ohne Vorlesungstermin werden zur Lektüre von ausgewählten Texten genutzt, die wir uns gemeinsam erarbeiten möchten. Ziel der als Kooperation der Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften organisierten Ringveranstaltung ist, die Menschen – Studierende wie Lehrende – die rund um das Neue Palais alltäglich zwischen den Disziplinen und Künsten wandeln, auf Tuchfühlung und ins Gespräch zu bringen.

In den 1910er Jahren verlagerte sich die prosperierende Filmproduktion der Vereinigten Staaten an die Westküste, Hollywood wurde zum Synonym für ein erfolgreiches Filmbusiness. In Sowjetrußland hemmten Revolution und Bürgerkrieg zunächst die Filmproduktion, die dann aber – staatlich gefördert – rasch aufblühte. Trotzdem hätte der berühmte Sergej #jzenštejn 1930 gerne in Hollywood einen Film gedreht, der sowjetische Filmminister Šumjatskij träumte sogar von einem „sowjetischen Hollywood“. Hollywood war Vor- und Feindbild. In der Sowjetunion wie in den USA gab es Filme, die z. T. als deutliche Konkurrenz zueinander konzipiert waren, und man zeigte den ideologischen Gegner nicht von einer vorteilhaftesten Seite. Die Vorlesung zeichnet nach, welche Filme auf welche Filme reagierten und wie in den USA entwickelte Genres (Musical-Film, Western, ...) auch im sowjetischen Kino heimisch gemacht wurden. Gezeigt wird auch, wie die unterschiedlichen Filmkulturen es einem sowjetischen Regisseur in den 1980er Jahren schwer machten, in den USA erfolgreich zu werden.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

Literatur

Please obtain and read the following texts in the specified editions: Charles Dickens, American Notes (1842). London: Penguin, 2004. Mark Twain: The Innocents Abroad (1869). London: Penguin, 2002. Roy Morris, jr: Declaring His Genius. Oscar Wilde in North America. Cambridge, MA: Belknap, 2013. Further course material will be made available on moodle. Solidarity once described a strong affiliation with a (political) community. Originating in the worker's movements, the term evolved around what came to be understood as a „collective identity“ that was strongly tied to a cause, often seen as unchanging and fixating political affiliations. As a result, in the industrial era, following a Marxist logic, social movements were believed to be centered in the working class. „New Social Movements“ describe the fluid and transnational participation of a diverse public in changing causes. How is solidarity articulated, if identities are increasingly diverse, multiple, and dispersed across location? How have movements like Fridays For Future, #metoo, Occupy and others harnessed collectivity across identities, time, space? The seminar will discuss theories on solidarity in new social movements and apply them to examples such as the ones mentioned above.

As Germany is slowly waking up from its "colonial amnesia," what are the debates that shake up the collective perception of Berlin, Germany and Europe as postcolonial spaces? What cultures of memory can be re-adapted to address this violent past, be it in the urban landscape or in institutions like museums or universities? How do artistic productions enable transnational vectors of memory that include the voices of descendants of the colonised? This course will start locally with traces of colonialism in Potsdam and Berlin (with an excursion) and open up toward national and transnational memory cultures that engage with the colonial past through performance, poetics and politics. Different avenues in memory studies will be introduced inductively to provide students with a theoretical corpus that will help in understand these particular practices of remembrance.

Please be aware that the course will address violent histories such as war and genocide, but also emotional topics such as racism, positionality and intersectional discrimination. The students are therefore encouraged to inform the course facilitator of anything they think worth mentioning (e.g. psychological sensitivity, positionality, ethics, personal experience with such issues).

- In course assessment: Students enrolled in Seminar 1 will be asked to submit an annotated reflection (800 words) on a discussion subject addressed during the course by 15th February (Testat not graded). Students enrolled in Seminar 2 will be asked to submit an annotated reflection (800 words) on a discussion subject addressed during the course by 15th February (Modulprüfung graded).
- Final assessment: Students who signed up for AM-BK-b (9 LP with Portfolioprfung) have two options:
 OPTION 1: submit a long essay (Hausarbeit) of 4-5,000 words (13-16 pages, 1,5 spacing) by 1st April 2020. If they wish, a slot can be allocated for students eager to present their ideas during the course and get feedback from the group and the course facilitator (5 min presentation, direct and indirect feedback).
 OPTION 2: Develop a memory project: through a medium (video, photo, artwork, brochure, performance, advertisement...), a student remembers a moment, events, a particular feature of colonial history, or people implicated in this history. The students are invited to connect their project with current local cultural and political debates on racism, genocide and museum collections. Next to it, students must write a reflection on the project, engaging with self-positioning and challenges encountered (1,500 to 2000 words, with a short bibliography).
 The course facilitator will provide an assessment grid that will lay bare what is roughly expected of these projects.

The political situation that emerged after the Second World War is often represented as a conflict between two superpowers – but how was the Cold War viewed from the global South? In this seminar, we will read scholarly and novelistic responses to this question. What happens when we draw forward the perspectives of those whose role in the cold war is often presented as minor, marginal or passive? We will try to reconsider the relationship between the cold war and the postcolonial, with a particular focus on perspectives from India and South Africa. Students should have access to Nadine Gordimer's July's People, and I. Allan Sealy's The Brainfever Bird and begin reading them as soon as possible. Other readings will be provided.

What does it mean to read the manifesto as a literary-cultural text? What makes a manifesto, and which tools best guide us through such documents? In this seminar, we will approach the manifesto through questions of genre, voice and narrative. We will try to develop an understanding-in-progress of its generic specifications, and the uses to which they are put. We will read a varied ion of manifestos, including artistic, feminist, and political. The seminar will be moderate in reading load, but will require a high level of class participation, as students will also be asked to find and present a manifesto of their own choosing, as well as attempt to write their own.

The seventeenth century saw Britain's entry to the imperial war zone of the Caribbean. Capturing colonizers' imagination, the region became the object of numerous pieces of writings. Descriptions of tropical nature unknown to most Britons at the time introduced tropes that still exert their influence today, while the plantation attracted ample attention in its own right. A violent laboratory for new commodities, racial identities, and ways of organizing labour, the plantation was to have profound implications for Caribbean history and the Atlantic world at large. Likewise, the lifestyle of the planters, whose upper echelons became Britain's nouveaux riches, received much comment ranging from admiration to derision.

This class will approach the Caribbean in the 1600s through the lens of the literature produced in those turbulent times. By reading island descriptions, satire, political pamphlets, and Aphra Behn's Oroonoko (arguably the first novel written in English), we will trace contemporaries' views — and incomprehension — of the history unfolding around them. Discussion topics will include bonded labour, race, attitudes towards tropical nature, and consumption. Attempts will be made to clarify the world-historical significance of the seventeenth-century Caribbean, and to highlight that period's relevance for issues like racialized labour and tourism today.

The poetic oeuvres of Mary Oliver and W.S. Merwin are distinguished by their decades-long engagements with the natural world. Though drawing on rather different forms, the lyric poems of both U.S. American writers seek to capture experiences of the nonhuman ranging from familiarity to revelation, from appreciation to crisis.

In this seminar, we will sample the extensive work of both poets by close-reading a range of their nature poems. Discussing notions like place, wilderness, and landscape, we will reflect on the relationship between humanity and nonhuman nature emerging from the poems. We will also inquire into their explicit and implicit politics, exploring issues such as class, ecological destruction, and the ways in which the texts grapple with American history. On occasion, we will tackle more philosophical questions about the concept of nature. Through interpreting the rich work of those two poets, we will address an overarching concern: the significance of nature poetry at the beginning of the twenty-first century. What are the possibilities and potential pitfalls of nature poetry at a historical moment which seems to mark a crisis in human-nature interactions? What, if anything, is the point of reading nature poetry today?

Not only in linguistics, the ubiquity of metaphor is a well-established fact. This seminar will acquaint students with conceptual metaphor theory – arguably the most widely accepted theory of metaphor – and its extensions (cultural model and blending theory). The course will, for the most part, follow Kövecses (2010), and cover, inter alia, the basic concepts of conceptual metaphor theory, the universality of metaphors vs. cultural specificity, and metaphoric systems. Students will be asked to do their own metaphor analyses and present their findings in class.

This course draws on students prior knowledge of linguistics (pronunciation, lexis, grammar) to explore how speakers of English as a foreign language make use of their evolving linguistic resources in spoken or written interaction. Students will learn to 1) apply the linguistic concepts and notions learned in the introductory courses to the description of real-world L2 English spoken and written data 2) identify issues regarding how linguistic resources are mobilized by L2 speakers 3) reflect on how classroom instruction may help L2 users improve their linguistic repertoires.

Sociolinguistics deals with the social life of language, language in its sociocultural context. It is a branch of linguistics that looks at how our words and sentences are influenced by the society around us, for instance, how the accent or the dialect we use has been shaped by where we come from or which social status group we belong to. In this introductory course we will examine the role of language in a variety of social contexts, considering both how language works and how it can be used to signal and interpret various aspects of social identity.

This foundational course draws on the phonetic, morphological, lexical, semantic and syntactic description as trained in the introductory module and pursues linguistic description at the level of (written) text and (spoken) discourse. Text(s) and discourse(s) are viewed functionally as ways of communicating and interacting with addressees. Their meaning, or interpretation, is heavily dependent upon context. We will examine a number of structural and organizational principles common to both text and discourse production, have a closer look at the context(s) in which they are produced, and we will consider specific aspects of text and discourse description including communicative genres and conversational structure.

California occupies a prominent place in the public imagination, whether in the USA or abroad be it for its Indigenous population, its history as part of a Spanish colony and then a Mexican territory, its (misleading and politically charged) symbolic value as the end of expansion for the USA, for the Gold Rush, the 1960s, the Black Panthers, the Occupation of Alcatraz, for LA and Hollywood, for San Francisco and Silicon Valley, for Death Valley and the Yosemite National Park, for Arnold Schwarzenegger, for countless songs, movies, and novels. This course will examine different depictions of the golden state from relatively contemporary novels - as the site for California Dreaming (whatever that means), for resistance, for individualism, for counterculture, for immigration, for discrimination, for gentrification, for pollution, for crime and for violence.

Violence, its representation and consumption is omnipresent in U.S. American culture. It lies at the heart of the very foundational myths that constitute American national identity. In fact violence has been variously described as an inherent part of the formation of nation states. Today, violence has lost most of its beneficial ascriptions and its rejection has become the epitome of civilization. Nonetheless, the spectacle of violence fascinates today as much as it did in the past (a phenomenon which perpetually startles scholars). But what really is violence? And what role do aesthetics play in the meaning and understanding of violence? A first and crucial part of this seminar will be to distinguish conceptually between the different forms of violence that we will be talking about. Starting with theories of violence, the course will attempt to trace violence as cultural performance and practices through various stages of U.S. history. Our seminar readings and discussions will focus on the different understandings and representations of violence in texts that span from the colonial era to the present and explore the politics and aesthetics of such representations. We will read excerpts from scholars such as Walter Benjamin, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, Susan Sontag, Judith Butler, Richard Slotkin, Wolfgang Iser, and J.P. Remtsma.

In den 1910er Jahren verlagerte sich die prosperierende Filmproduktion der Vereinigten Staaten an die Westküste, Hollywood wurde zum Synonym für ein erfolgreiches Filmbusiness. In Sowjetrußland hemmten Revolution und Bürgerkrieg zunächst die Filmproduktion, die dann aber – staatlich gefördert – rasch aufblühte. Trotzdem hätte der berühmte Sergej #jzenštejn 1930 gerne in Hollywood einen Film gedreht, der sowjetische Filmminister Šumjatskij träumte sogar von einem „sowjetischen Hollywood“. Hollywood war Vor- und Feindbild. In der Sowjetunion wie in den USA gab es Filme, die z. T. als deutliche Konkurrenz zueinander konzipiert waren, und man zeigte den ideologischen Gegner nicht von einer vorteilhaftesten Seite. Die Vorlesung zeichnet nach, welche Filme auf welche Filme reagierten und wie in den USA entwickelte Genres (Musical-Film, Western, ...) auch im sowjetischen Kino heimisch gemacht wurden. Gezeigt wird auch, wie die unterschiedlichen Filmkulturen es einem sowjetischen Regisseur in den 1980er Jahren schwer machten, in den USA erfolgreich zu werden.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

The poetic oeuvres of Mary Oliver and W.S. Merwin are distinguished by their decades-long engagements with the natural world. Though drawing on rather different forms, the lyric poems of both U.S. American writers seek to capture experiences of the nonhuman ranging from familiarity to revelation, from appreciation to crisis.

In this seminar, we will sample the extensive work of both poets by close-reading a range of their nature poems. Discussing notions like place, wilderness, and landscape, we will reflect on the relationship between humanity and nonhuman nature emerging from the poems. We will also inquire into their explicit and implicit politics, exploring issues such as class, ecological destruction, and the ways in which the texts grapple with American history. On occasion, we will tackle more philosophical questions about the concept of nature. Through interpreting the rich work of those two poets, we will address an overarching concern: the significance of nature poetry at the beginning of the twenty-first century. What are the possibilities and potential pitfalls of nature poetry at a historical moment which seems to mark a crisis in human-nature interactions? What, if anything, is the point of reading nature poetry today?

Epidemics have always at the same time terrified and fascinated mankind. This block seminar focuses on the cultural impact of epidemic diseases on U.S. society from the yellow fever epidemics of the 18th century to the HIV/AIDS crisis and the recent experience of SARS and swine flu (H5N1). We will look at the way narratives about contagion and epidemics function as a means to demarcate socio-cultural Otherness as well as national identity formations and belonging. We will analyze literary representations of epidemics by Edgar Allan Poe, Susan Sontag, John Edgar Wideman and others as well as filmic representations such as Wolfgang Petersen's Outbreak (1995) and Steven Soderbergh's Contagion (2011).

As participants will learn in this seminar, crime and detection in nineteenth-century (British) literature are about much more than just Sherlock Holmes. Rather, they will explore the development of and changing attitudes towards crime, policing, and the detective. They will meet familiar faces - Poe's Dupin, Collins's Sergeant Cuff and of course Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes - and they will investigate the British nation's fascination with both real and fictional murder, theft, and the criminal him-/herself in a century of social change and social challenges. The aim of this seminar is, to provide participants with an understanding of the many facets of crime and detection narratives, of their roots in and connection to the society that produced and devoured them, as well as of the legacy these narratives have left over the decades that followed.

This course will be reading-intensive and regular attendance, as well as active participation in class, are expected.

Leistungsnachweis2/3 ECTS

Either:

You will be expected to write an essay of approx. 4,000 words. Throughout the seminar you will learn to formulate a thesis, develop a structure, research the appropriate literature, and, in the end, produce said essay, which will be concerned with an aspect of the topic in general or a specific sub-topic we discuss. Said thesis, structure, and literature choice will have to be handed in over the course of the semester so that you can develop your essay as we move through the topic. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

Or:

You will be expected to give a presentation, the topic/format of which will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar. Only a limited number of presentation slots are available. The presentation should not exceed 20 mins and should lead to a class discussion. If you are a teacher trainer student, we may discuss other formats of presentation. Your presentation structure and handout will have to be discussed with me before the presentation takes place. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Again, further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

In addition to either of this, you are expected to prepare for each session to enable you to take part in in-class discussions and exercises. You will also be encouraged to provide feedback to others while you yourself will also be given feedback by members of the class.

6 ECTS

If you are taking this course as a 'b-Seminar' you will be required to write an additional module paper of approx. 6,000 words. This may or may not be connected to the topic of this course. If you plan on writing this module paper, please approach me before or after class or send me an email with an idea of the topic you would like to discuss.

The last decades have seen an upsurge of autobiographical writing as well as of multimedia self-presentations by disabled persons. This seminar focuses on female British authors' verbal, graphic and digital autobiographies which depict life stories shaped by physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities. "Disability" will be introduced as a fluid, intersectional identity category (a category intersecting with gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity/race) that challenges the binary opposition between "disabled" and "non-disabled", "normal" or "able-bodied". The seminar deals with the broader subject of disability as a new category in cultural and literary studies as well as with disability autobiography as a multimedia genre. We will analyse verbal, graphic and digital forms of autobiographies by investigating their narrative structures and by exploring them as creative responses to the ableist, mentalist, sexist, racist and heteronormative representations of women with physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities in medical discourse and the media. Furthermore, we discuss if (and how) the self-presentations in different media produce and perform unexpected, novel, controversial and strongly interactive images of bio- and neurodiversity.

The course introduces into a period of crucial transition in Britain from the early 20th to the 21st century, a century of immense, thorough social, political, cultural changes, challenges and threats.

We will focus on social, cultural and literary phenomena and follow up some major developments throughout the 20th century. Modernism, World War I/II, Cold War are only a few keywords that relate to this course project and find repercussions in a wide range of partly controversial experimental and avantgarde trends in arts (incl. literature). In literature, this primarily relates to a rejection of 19th-century traditions and conventions and a termination of the previous consensus between author and reader in traditional realism. Modernists, then, regarded themselves as a cosmopolitan avantgarde subverting bourgeois values. This subversion was expressed both in complex formal experiment and in provocative subject matter such as urban cultural dislocation. The realism-based continuity of chronological development was challenged; new ways of tracing the flow of characters' thoughts found expression in the stream-of-consciousness technique. Complex collages of fragmentary images substituted allusions to logical, teleological exposition of thoughts and can be read as repercussions of the writers' alert awareness of new anthropological and psychological theories. The trauma of World War I and II and the Holocaust as well as the Cold War left repercussions in the arts too, for sure and certainly contributed to the development of postmodernist aesthetics.

During the course, we will problematise aspects of these transitions. We will look (a) into concepts of modernism/postmodernism and (b) investigate into innovative (post)modernist aesthetic impulses in canonical and noncanonical texts/writers. Changing gender concepts as well as aspects of representations of the British Empire will be of reoccurring interest.

Die Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften bringen in Kontakt: Text und Welt, Text und Theorie, Text und Bild, Texte verschiedener Sprachen, Epochen, kultureller Dispositive... 'Komparatistisches' Arbeiten gehört in den Geisteswissenschaften zum täglich Brot. Wie schon im Namen Kom-paratistik eingeschrieben, ist diese Praxis getragen von einem unhintergehbaren MITEINANDER – nicht nur von Abstrakta wie 'Texten' oder 'Disziplinen', sondern von Menschen, ihren Projekten und Interessen, ihrer je eigenen Ansteckungskraft und Empfänglichkeit für das ihnen Begegnende. Die Ringveranstaltung soll eine Stätte bieten, die Potsdamer komparatistischen Kontaktflächen über die Disziplinen hinweg gemeinsam zu erleben und auszuprobieren. In regelmäßigem Rhythmus werden Kolleg*innen aus den verschiedenen Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften (AVL, Anglistik, Germanistik, Romanistik, Slavistik) ihre je spezifische komparatistische Kontaktfläche vorstellen. Die Wochen ohne Vorlesungstermin werden zur Lektüre von ausgewählten Texten genutzt, die wir uns gemeinsam erarbeiten möchten. Ziel der als Kooperation der Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften organisierten Ringveranstaltung ist, die Menschen – Studierende wie Lehrende – die rund um das Neue Palais alltäglich zwischen den Disziplinen und Künsten wandeln, auf Tuchfühlung und ins Gespräch zu bringen.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

The political situation that emerged after the Second World War is often represented as a conflict between two superpowers – but how was the Cold War viewed from the global South? In this seminar, we will read scholarly and novelistic responses to this question. What happens when we draw forward the perspectives of those whose role in the cold war is often presented as minor, marginal or passive? We will try to reconsider the relationship between the cold war and the postcolonial, with a particular focus on perspectives from India and South Africa. Students should have access to Nadine Gordimer's July's People, and I. Allan Sealy's The Brainfever Bird and begin reading them as soon as possible. Other readings will be provided.

What does it mean to read the manifesto as a literary-cultural text? What makes a manifesto, and which tools best guide us through such documents? In this seminar, we will approach the manifesto through questions of genre, voice and narrative. We will try to develop an understanding-in-progress of its generic specifications, and the uses to which they are put. We will read a varied ion of manifestos, including artistic, feminist, and political. The seminar will be moderate in reading load, but will require a high level of class participation, as students will also be asked to find and present a manifesto of their own choosing, as well as attempt to write their own.

The seventeenth century saw Britain's entry to the imperial war zone of the Caribbean. Capturing colonizers' imagination, the region became the object of numerous pieces of writings. Descriptions of tropical nature unknown to most Britons at the time introduced tropes that still exert their influence today, while the plantation attracted ample attention in its own right. A violent laboratory for new commodities, racial identities, and ways of organizing labour, the plantation was to have profound implications for Caribbean history and the Atlantic world at large. Likewise, the lifestyle of the planters, whose upper echelons became Britain's nouveaux riches, received much comment ranging from admiration to derision.

This class will approach the Caribbean in the 1600s through the lens of the literature produced in those turbulent times. By reading island descriptions, satire, political pamphlets, and Aphra Behn's Oroonoko (arguably the first novel written in English), we will trace contemporaries' views — and incomprehension — of the history unfolding around them. Discussion topics will include bonded labour, race, attitudes towards tropical nature, and consumption. Attempts will be made to clarify the world-historical significance of the seventeenth-century Caribbean, and to highlight that period's relevance for issues like racialized labour and tourism today.

The poetic oeuvres of Mary Oliver and W.S. Merwin are distinguished by their decades-long engagements with the natural world. Though drawing on rather different forms, the lyric poems of both U.S. American writers seek to capture experiences of the nonhuman ranging from familiarity to revelation, from appreciation to crisis.

In this seminar, we will sample the extensive work of both poets by close-reading a range of their nature poems. Discussing notions like place, wilderness, and landscape, we will reflect on the relationship between humanity and nonhuman nature emerging from the poems. We will also inquire into their explicit and implicit politics, exploring issues such as class, ecological destruction, and the ways in which the texts grapple with American history. On occasion, we will tackle more philosophical questions about the concept of nature. Through interpreting the rich work of those two poets, we will address an overarching concern: the significance of nature poetry at the beginning of the twenty-first century. What are the possibilities and potential pitfalls of nature poetry at a historical moment which seems to mark a crisis in human-nature interactions? What, if anything, is the point of reading nature poetry today?

As participants will learn in this seminar, crime and detection in nineteenth-century (British) literature are about much more than just Sherlock Holmes. Rather, they will explore the development of and changing attitudes towards crime, policing, and the detective. They will meet familiar faces - Poe's Dupin, Collins's Sergeant Cuff and of course Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes - and they will investigate the British nation's fascination with both real and fictional murder, theft, and the criminal him-/herself in a century of social change and social challenges. The aim of this seminar is, to provide participants with an understanding of the many facets of crime and detection narratives, of their roots in and connection to the society that produced and devoured them, as well as of the legacy these narratives have left over the decades that followed.

This course will be reading-intensive and regular attendance, as well as active participation in class, are expected.

Leistungsnachweis2/3 ECTSEither:*

You will be expected to write an essay of approx. 4,000 words. Throughout the seminar you will learn to formulate a thesis, develop a structure, research the appropriate literature, and, in the end, produce said essay, which will be concerned with an aspect of the topic in general or a specific sub-topic we discuss. Said thesis, structure, and literature choice will have to be handed in over the course of the semester so that you can develop your essay as we move through the topic. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

Or:

You will be expected to give a presentation, the topic/format of which will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar. Only a limited number of presentation slots are available. The presentation should not exceed 20 mins and should lead to a class discussion. If you are a teacher trainer student, we may discuss other formats of presentation. Your presentation structure and handout will have to be discussed with me before the presentation takes place. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Again, further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

In addition to either of this, you are expected to prepare for each session to enable you to take part in in-class discussions and exercises. You will also be encouraged to provide feedback to others while you yourself will also be given feedback by members of the class.

6 ECTS

If you are taking this course as a 'b-Seminar' you will be required to write an additional module paper of approx. 6,000 words. This may or may not be connected to the topic of this course. If you plan on writing this module paper, please approach me before or after class or send me an email with an idea of the topic you would like to discuss.

Waste is generally understood as the mundane, worthless, redundant and discarded afterwards of how we live our lives. In recent years, however, there has been an increasing scholarly interest in how societies relate to waste. Building on this research, this seminar takes as a starting point the fact that we spend a good amount of time in our #ordinary# lives managing waste, and that the problem of how we manage waste is at the heart of the environmental crisis and the development of more sustainable futures. Exploring that which is rejected, we will investigate waste as a dynamic category that needs to be understood in relation to the modern contexts in which it is most commonly found and transformed, and the relationships in which it is embedded. We will also address contemporary innovative practices of reuse, recycling and re#purposing. Through such cultures of renewal, waste products not only acquire a new value and function, but they also become entangled in new social relations and material practices. Waste and garbage thus become metonymic devices for conveying crucial insights into contemporary culture.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

Originating in the worker's movements, the term evolved around what came to be understood as a „collective identity“ that was strongly tied to a cause, often seen as unchanging and fixating political affiliations. As a result, in the industrial era, following a Marxist logic, social movements were believed to be centered in the working class. „New Social Movements“ describe the fluid and transnational participation of a diverse public in changing causes. How is solidarity articulated, if identities are increasingly diverse, multiple, and dispersed across location? How have movements like Fridays For Future, #metoo, Occupy and others harnessed collectivity across identities, time, space? The seminar will discuss theories on solidarity in new social movements and apply them to examples such as the ones mentioned above.

California occupies a prominent place in the public imagination, whether in the USA or abroad be it for its Indigenous population, its history as part of a Spanish colony and then a Mexican territory, its (misleading and politically charged) symbolic value as the end of expansion for the USA, for the Gold Rush, the 1960s, the Black Panthers, the Occupation of Alcatraz, for LA and Hollywood, for San Francisco and Silicon Valley, for Death Valley and the Yosemite National Park, for Arnold Schwarzenegger, for countless songs, movies, and novels. This course will examine different depictions of the golden state from relatively contemporary novels - as the site for California Dreaming (whatever that means), for resistance, for individualism, for counterculture, for immigration, for discrimination, for gentrification, for pollution, for crime and for violence.

Violence, its representation and consumption is omnipresent in U.S. American culture. It lies at the heart of the very foundational myths that constitute American national identity. In fact violence has been variously described as an inherent part of the formation of nation states. Today, violence has lost most of its beneficial ascriptions and its rejection has become the epitome of civilization. Nonetheless, the spectacle of violence fascinates today as much as it did in the past (a phenomenon which perpetually startles scholars). But what really is violence? And what role do aesthetics play in the meaning and understanding of violence? A first and crucial part of this seminar will be to distinguish conceptually between the different forms of violence that we will be talking about. Starting with theories of violence, the course will attempt to trace violence as cultural performance and practices through various stages of U.S. history. Our seminar readings and discussions will focus on the different understandings and representations of violence in texts that span from the colonial era to the present and explore the politics and aesthetics of such representations. We will read excerpts from scholars such as Walter Benjamin, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, Susan Sontag, Judith Butler, Richard Slotkin, Wolfgang Iser, and J.P. Remtsma.

The course introduces into a period of crucial transition in Britain from the early 20th to the 21st century, a century of immense, thorough social, political, cultural changes, challenges and threats.
We will focus on social, cultural and literary phenomena and follow up some major developments throughout the 20th century. Modernism, World War I/II, Cold War are only a few keywords that relate to this course project and find repercussions in a wide range of partly controversial experimental and avantgarde trends in arts (incl. literature). In literature, this primarily relates to a rejection of 19th-century traditions and conventions and a termination of the previous consensus between author and reader in traditional realism. Modernists, then, regarded themselves as a cosmopolitan avantgarde subverting bourgeois values. This subversion was expressed both in complex formal experiment and in provocative subject matter such as urban cultural dislocation. The realism-based continuity of chronological development was challenged; new ways of tracing the flow of characters' thoughts found expression in the stream-of-consciousness technique. Complex collages of fragmentary images substituted allusions to logical, teleological exposition of thoughts and can be read as repercussions of the writers' alert awareness of new anthropological and psychological theories. The trauma of World War I and II and the Holocaust as well as the Cold War left repercussions in the arts too, for sure and certainly contributed to the development of postmodernist aesthetics.
During the course, we will problematise aspects of these transitions. We will look (a) into concepts of modernism/postmodernism and (b) investigate into innovative (post)modernist aesthetic impulses in canonical and noncanonical texts/writers. Changing gender concepts as well as aspects of representations of the British Empire will be of reoccurring interest.

It focuses on basic contemporary methods and approaches of analysis and introduces the students to aesthetic concepts in English poetry roughly after World War II. In its survey character, this course will cover both highlights of British canonized poetry and more marginal voices this approach will include inherent or explicit problematisations of aspects of gender and ethnic identity from canonical and non-canonical anglophone voices of various former British colonial regions.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Die Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften bringen in Kontakt: Text und Welt, Text und Theorie, Text und Bild, Texte verschiedener Sprachen, Epochen, kultureller Dispositive... 'Komparatistisches' Arbeiten gehört in den Geisteswissenschaften zum täglich Brot. Wie schon im Namen Kom-paratistik eingeschrieben, ist diese Praxis getragen von einem unhintergehbaren MITEINANDER – nicht nur von Abstrakta wie 'Texten' oder 'Disziplinen', sondern von Menschen, ihren Projekten und Interessen, ihrer je eigenen Ansteckungskraft und Empfänglichkeit für das ihnen Begegnende. Die Ringveranstaltung soll eine Stätte bieten, die Potsdamer komparatistischen Kontaktflächen über die Disziplinen hinweg gemeinsam zu erleben und auszuprobieren. In regelmäßigem Rhythmus werden Kolleg*innen aus den verschiedenen Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften (AVL, Anglistik, Germanistik, Romanistik, Slavistik) ihre je spezifische komparatistische Kontaktfläche vorstellen. Die Wochen ohne Vorlesungstermin werden zur Lektüre von ausgewählten Texten genutzt, die wir uns gemeinsam erarbeiten möchten. Ziel der als Kooperation der Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften organisierten Ringveranstaltung ist, die Menschen – Studierende wie Lehrende – die rund um das Neue Palais alltäglich zwischen den Disziplinen und Künsten wandeln, auf Tuchfühlung und ins Gespräch zu bringen.

If they wish, a slot can be allocated for students eager to present their ideas during the course and get feedback from the group and the course facilitator (5 min presentation, direct and indirect feedback).
 OPTION 2: Develop a memory project: through a medium (video, photo, artwork, brochure, performance, advertisement...), a student remembers a moment, events, a particular feature of colonial history, or people implicated in this history. The students are invited to connect their project with current local cultural and political debates on racism, genocide and museum collections. Next to it, students must write a reflection on the project, engaging with self-positioning and challenges encountered (1,500 to 2000 words, with a short bibliography).
 The course facilitator will provide an assessment grid that will lay bare what is roughly expected of these projects.

The political situation that emerged after the Second World War is often represented as a conflict between two superpowers – but how was the Cold War viewed from the global South? In this seminar, we will read scholarly and novelistic responses to this question. What happens when we draw forward the perspectives of those whose role in the cold war is often presented as minor, marginal or passive? We will try to reconsider the relationship between the cold war and the postcolonial, with a particular focus on perspectives from India and South Africa. Students should have access to Nadine Gordimer's July's People , and I. Allan Sealy's The Brainfever Bird and begin reading them as soon as possible. Other readings will be provided.

Please follow the "comment" link above for more information on comments, course readings, course requirements and grading. The seventeenth century saw Britain's entry to the imperial war zone of the Caribbean. Capturing colonizers' imagination, the region became the object of numerous pieces of writings. Descriptions of tropical nature unknown to most Britons at the time introduced tropes that still exert their influence today, while the plantation attracted ample attention in its own right. A violent laboratory for new commodities, racial identities, and ways of organizing labour, the plantation was to have profound implications for Caribbean history and the Atlantic world at large. Likewise, the lifestyle of the planters, whose upper echelons became Britain's nouveaux riches, received much comment ranging from admiration to derision. This class will approach the Caribbean in the 1600s through the lens of the literature produced in those turbulent times. By reading island descriptions, satire, political pamphlets, and Aphra Behn's Oroonoko (arguably the first novel written in English), we will trace contemporaries' views — and incomprehension — of the history unfolding around them. Discussion topics will include bonded labour, race, attitudes towards tropical nature, and consumption. Attempts will be made to clarify the world-historical significance of the seventeenth-century Caribbean, and to highlight that period's relevance for issues like racialized labour and tourism today.

Students are expected to attend the class regularly and to have read the assigned texts. Since our topic requires a solid grasp of developments in seventeenth-century Britain and the Caribbean, students should be prepared to read a fair share of history texts alongside the 'primary' literature. Students seeking to get either an ungraded pass/fail note or 3 credit points have to submit one reading response, once per semester either minutes or a thesis statement, and, at the end of the course, a reflection. Students seeking to get 6 credit points are required to submit a term paper instead of the reflection, in addition to the other course components.

This is the first part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in linguistics. It aims to introduce students to the nature of language and the major domains of linguistic inquiry as well as its basic concepts, principles and tools in the following areas: Phonetics, Phonology, Morphology and Lexical Semantics. They will

- excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions,
- test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions,
- clarify questions in class, and
- complete assignments

in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies.

Please note that this course is offered by different instructors on different time slots every week. We also offer it in 2 different formats:

1) instructor-guided tuition (groups 3+4) with obligatory reading before class on the basis of guiding questions so that the session content can be collected interactively in class vs.

2) inverted-classroom format (groups 1+2) with the session content available as online material before the session, so that more of the in-class time can be used to settle questions.

Both formats offer plenty of exercises before and in class. You may choose from these what suits you best in terms of both time slots and formats.

There will be quizzes and a mock exam.

Students are encouraged to acquire a copy of the textbook (see below) before the beginning of the semester.

Tutorials (which provide you with further practice) will be announced at the beginning of the semester. It is strongly recommended that students attend one of these tutorials regularly.

This is the second part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in linguistics. In this course, students will learn about aspects of syntax, i.e. how phrases, clauses, and sentences are formed. They - excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions, - test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions, - clarify questions in class, and - complete assignments, which also include an application task, for each subtopic in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies. Please note that this course is offered by different instructors on different time slots every week. We also offer it in 2 different formats: 1) instructor-guided tuition (groups 1+4) with obligatory reading before class on the basis of guiding questions so that the session content can be collected interactively in class vs. 2) inverted-classroom format (groups 2+3) with the session content available as online material before the session, so that more of the in-class time can then be used to settle questions. Both formats offer plenty of exercises before and in class. You may choose these what suits you best in terms of both time slots and formats. There will be e-assignments and a mock exam. Students are encouraged to acquire a copy of the textbook (see below) before the beginning of the semester. Tutorials (which provide you with further practice) will be announced at the beginning of the semester. We strongly recommend attending this course in parallel with part I. The course offers an introduction to the history of the English language from its origins to the present day. It explores the linguistic roots of English, the changes in pronunciation and loss of inflections, as well as the enormous expansion in vocabulary which characterizes the development of English. We will also consider the different varieties of English in evidence today and the similarities and dissimilarities between English and other Germanic languages. Among the difficulties encountered by ESL/EFL students are the English system of tenses as well as the discrepancy between spelling and pronunciation: these will all be dealt with in this series of lectures.

Sociolinguistics deals with the social life of language, language in its sociocultural context. It is a branch of linguistics that looks at how our words and sentences are influenced by the society around us, for instance, how the accent or the dialect we use has been shaped by where we come from or which social status group we belong to. In this introductory course we will examine the role of language in a variety of social contexts, considering both how language works and how it can be used to signal and interpret various aspects of social identity.

Not only in linguistics, the ubiquity of metaphor is a well-established fact. This seminar will acquaint students with conceptual metaphor theory – arguably the most widely accepted theory of metaphor – and its extensions (cultural model and blending theory). The course will, for the most part, follow Kövecses (2010), and cover, inter alia, the basic concepts of conceptual metaphor theory, the universality of metaphors vs. cultural specificity, and metaphoric systems. Students will be asked to do their own metaphor analyses and present their findings in class.

Students will learn to 1) apply the linguistic concepts and notions learned in the introductory courses to the description of real-world L2 English spoken and written data 2) identify issues regarding how linguistic resources are mobilized by L2 speakers 3) reflect on how classroom instruction may help L2 users improve their linguistic repertoires.

This foundational course draws on the phonetic, morphological, lexical, semantic and syntactic description as trained in the introductory module and pursues linguistic description at the level of (written) text and (spoken) discourse. Text(s) and discourse(s) are viewed functionally as ways of communicating and interacting with addressees. Their meaning, or interpretation, is heavily dependent upon context. We will examine a number of structural and organizational principles common to both text and discourse production, have a closer look at the context(s) in which they are produced, and we will consider specific aspects of text and discourse description including communicative genres and conversational structure.

California occupies a prominent place in the public imagination, whether in the USA or abroad be it for its Indigenous population, its history as part of a Spanish colony and then a Mexican territory, its (misleading and politically charged) symbolic value as the end of expansion for the USA, for the Gold Rush, the 1960s, the Black Panthers, the Occupation of Alcatraz, for LA and Hollywood, for San Francisco and Silicon Valley, for Death Valley and the Yosemite National Park, for Arnold Schwarzenegger, for countless songs, movies, and novels. This course will examine different depictions of the golden state from relatively contemporary novels - as the site for California Dreaming (whatever that means), for resistance, for individualism, for counterculture, for immigration, for discrimination, for gentrification, for pollution, for crime and for violence.

Violence, its representation and consumption is omnipresent in U.S. American culture. It lies at the heart of the very foundational myths that constitute American national identity. In fact violence has been variously described as an inherent part of the formation of nation states. Today, violence has lost most of its beneficial ascriptions and its rejection has become the epitome of civilization. Nonetheless, the spectacle of violence fascinates today as much as it did in the past (a phenomenon which perpetually startles scholars). But what really is violence? And what role do aesthetics play in the meaning and understanding of violence? A first and crucial part of this seminar will be to distinguish conceptually between the different forms of violence that we will be talking about. Starting with theories of violence, the course will attempt to trace violence as cultural performance and practices through various stages of U.S. history. Our seminar readings and discussions will focus on the different understandings and representations of violence in texts that span from the colonial era to the present and explore the politics and aesthetics of such representations. We will read excerpts from scholars such as Walter Benjamin, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, Susan Sontag, Judith Butler, Richard Slotkin, Wolfgang Sofsky, and J.P. Remtsma.

In den 1910er Jahren verlagerte sich die prosperierende Filmproduktion der Vereinigten Staaten an die Westküste, Hollywood wurde zum Synonym für ein erfolgreiches Filmbusiness. In Sowjetrußland hemmten Revolution und Bürgerkrieg zunächst die Filmproduktion, die dann aber – staatlich gefördert – rasch aufblühte. Trotzdem hätte der berühmte Sergej #jzenštejn 1930 gerne in Hollywood einen Film gedreht, der sowjetische Filmminister Šumjatskij träumte sogar von einem „sowjetischen Hollywood“. Hollywood war Vor- und Feindbild. In der Sowjetunion wie in den USA gab es Filme, die z. T. als deutliche Konkurrenz zueinander konzipiert waren, und man zeigte den ideologischen Gegner nicht von einer vorteilhaftesten Seite. Die Vorlesung zeichnet nach, welche Filme auf welche Filme reagierten und wie in den USA entwickelte Genres (Musical-Film, Western, ...) auch im sowjetischen Kino heimisch gemacht wurden. Gezeigt wird auch, wie die unterschiedlichen Filmkulturen es einem sowjetischen Regisseur in den 1980er Jahren schwer machten, in den USA erfolgreich zu werden.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

The poetic oeuvres of Mary Oliver and W.S. Merwin are distinguished by their decades-long engagements with the natural world. Though drawing on rather different forms, the lyric poems of both U.S. American writers seek to capture experiences of the nonhuman ranging from familiarity to revelation, from appreciation to crisis.

In this seminar, we will sample the extensive work of both poets by close-reading a range of their nature poems. Discussing notions like place, wilderness, and landscape, we will reflect on the relationship between humanity and nonhuman nature emerging from the poems. We will also inquire into their explicit and implicit politics, exploring issues such as class, ecological destruction, and the ways in which the texts grapple with American history. On occasion, we will tackle more philosophical questions about the concept of nature. Through interpreting the rich work of those two poets, we will address an overarching concern: the significance of nature poetry at the beginning of the twenty-first century. What are the possibilities and potential pitfalls of nature poetry at a historical moment which seems to mark a crisis in human-nature interactions? What, if anything, is the point of reading nature poetry today?

Epidemics have always at the same time terrified and fascinated mankind. This block seminar focuses on the cultural impact of epidemic diseases on U.S. society from the yellow fever epidemics of the 18th century to the HIV/AIDS crisis and the recent experience of SARS and swine flu (H5N1). We will look at the way narratives about contagion and epidemics function as a means to demarcate socio-cultural Otherness as well as national identity formations and belonging. We will analyze literary representations of epidemics by Edgar Allan Poe, Susan Sontag, John Edgar Wideman and others as well as filmic representations such as Wolfgang Petersen's Outbreak (1995) and Steven Soderbergh's Contagion (2011).

As participants will learn in this seminar, crime and detection in nineteenth-century (British) literature are about much more than just Sherlock Holmes. Rather, they will explore the development of and changing attitudes towards crime, policing, and the detective. They will meet familiar faces - Poe's Dupin, Collins's Sergeant Cuff and of course Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes - and they will investigate the British nation's fascination with both real and fictional murder, theft, and the criminal him-/herself in a century of social change and social challenges. The aim of this seminar is, to provide participants with an understanding of the many facets of crime and detection narratives, of their roots in and connection to the society that produced and devoured them, as well as of the legacy these narratives have left over the decades that followed.

This course will be reading-intensive and regular attendance, as well as active participation in class, are expected.

Leistungsnachweis2/3 ECTSEither:*

You will be expected to write an essay of approx. 4,000 words. Throughout the seminar you will learn to formulate a thesis, develop a structure, research the appropriate literature, and, in the end, produce said essay, which will be concerned with an aspect of the topic in general or a specific sub-topic we discuss. Said thesis, structure, and literature choice will have to be handed in over the course of the semester so that you can develop your essay as we move through the topic. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

Or:

You will be expected to give a presentation, the topic/format of which will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar. Only a limited number of presentation slots are available. The presentation should not exceed 20 mins and should lead to a class discussion. If you are a teacher trainer student, we may discuss other formats of presentation. Your presentation structure and handout will have to be discussed with me before the presentation takes place. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Again, further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

In addition to either of this, you are expected to prepare for each session to enable you to take part in in-class discussions and exercises. You will also be encouraged to provide feedback to others while you yourself will also be given feedback by members of the class.

6 ECTS

If you are taking this course as a 'b-Seminar' you will be required to write an additional module paper of approx. 6,000 words. This may or may not be connected to the topic of this course. If you plan on writing this module paper, please approach me before or after class or send me an email with an idea of the topic you would like to discuss.

The last decades have seen an upsurge of autobiographical writing as well as of multimedia self-presentations by disabled persons. This seminar focuses on female British authors' verbal, graphic and digital autobiographies which depict life stories shaped by physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities. "Disability" will be introduced as a fluid, intersectional identity category (a category intersecting with gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity/race) that challenges the binary opposition between "disabled" and "non-disabled", "normal" or "able-bodied". The seminar deals with the broader subject of disability as a new category in cultural and literary studies as well as with disability autobiography as a multimedia genre. We will analyse verbal, graphic and digital forms of autobiographies by investigating their narrative structures and by exploring them as creative responses to the ableist, mentalist, sexist, racist and heteronormative representations of women with physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities in medical discourse and the media. Furthermore, we discuss if (and how) the self-presentations in different media produce and perform unexpected, novel, controversial and strongly interactive images of bio- and neurodiversity.

The course introduces into a period of crucial transition in Britain from the early 20th to the 21st century, a century of immense, thorough social, political, cultural changes, challenges and threats.

We will focus on social, cultural and literary phenomena and follow up some major developments throughout the 20th century. Modernism, World War I/II, Cold War are only a few keywords that relate to this course project and find repercussions in a wide range of partly controversial experimental and avantgarde trends in arts (incl. literature). In literature, this primarily relates to a rejection of 19th-century traditions and conventions and a termination of the previous consensus between author and reader in traditional realism. Modernists, then, regarded themselves as a cosmopolitan avantgarde subverting bourgeois values. This subversion was expressed both in complex formal experiment and in provocative subject matter such as urban cultural dislocation. The realism-based continuity of chronological development was challenged; new ways of tracing the flow of characters' thoughts found expression in the stream-of-consciousness technique. Complex collages of fragmentary images substituted allusions to logical, teleological exposition of thoughts and can be read as repercussions of the writers' alert awareness of new anthropological and psychological theories. The trauma of World War I and II and the Holocaust as well as the Cold War left repercussions in the arts too, for sure and certainly contributed to the development of postmodernist aesthetics.

During the course, we will problematise aspects of these transitions. We will look (a) into concepts of modernism/postmodernism and (b) investigate into innovative (post)modernist aesthetic impulses in canonical and noncanonical texts/writers. Changing gender concepts as well as aspects of representations of the British Empire will be of reoccurring interest.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Die Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften bringen in Kontakt: Text und Welt, Text und Theorie, Text und Bild, Texte verschiedener Sprachen, Epochen, kultureller Dispositive... 'Komparatistisches' Arbeiten gehört in den Geisteswissenschaften zum täglich Brot. Wie schon im Namen Kom-paratistik eingeschrieben, ist diese Praxis getragen von einem unhintergehbaren MITEINANDER – nicht nur von Abstrakta wie 'Texten' oder 'Disziplinen', sondern von Menschen, ihren Projekten und Interessen, ihrer je eigenen Ansteckungskraft und Empfänglichkeit für das ihnen Begegnende. Die Ringveranstaltung soll eine Stätte bieten, die Potsdamer komparatistischen Kontaktflächen über die Disziplinen hinweg gemeinsam zu erleben und auszuprobieren. In regelmäßigem Rhythmus werden Kolleg*innen aus den verschiedenen Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften (AVL, Anglistik, Germanistik, Romanistik, Slavistik) ihre je spezifische komparatistische Kontaktfläche vorstellen. Die Wochen ohne Vorlesungstermin werden zur Lektüre von ausgewählten Texten genutzt, die wir uns gemeinsam erarbeiten möchten. Ziel der als Kooperation der Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften organisierten Ringveranstaltung ist, die Menschen – Studierende wie Lehrende – die rund um das Neue Palais alltäglich zwischen den Disziplinen und Künsten wandeln, auf Tuchfühlung und ins Gespräch zu bringen.

The political situation that emerged after the Second World War is often represented as a conflict between two superpowers – but how was the Cold War viewed from the global South? In this seminar, we will read scholarly and novelistic responses to this question. What happens when we draw forward the perspectives of those whose role in the cold war is often presented as minor, marginal or passive? We will try to reconsider the relationship between the cold war and the postcolonial, with a particular focus on perspectives from India and South Africa. Students should have access to Nadine Gordimer's July's People, and I. Allan Sealy's The Brainfever Bird and begin reading them as soon as possible. Other readings will be provided.

What does it mean to read the manifesto as a literary-cultural text? What makes a manifesto, and which tools best guide us through such documents? In this seminar, we will approach the manifesto through questions of genre, voice and narrative. We will try to develop an understanding-in-progress of its generic specifications, and the uses to which they are put. We will read a varied ion of manifestos, including artistic, feminist, and political. The seminar will be moderate in reading load, but will require a high level of class participation, as students will also be asked to find and present a manifesto of their own choosing, as well as attempt to write their own.

Leistungsnachweis

All students are expected to attend class regularly and well-prepared, and to offer one presentation and one peer review. Testat: a manifesto of your own making (1-2 pages) and a theoretical discussion thereof (1000 words).

The seventeenth century saw Britain's entry to the imperial war zone of the Caribbean. Capturing colonizers' imagination, the region became the object of numerous pieces of writings. Descriptions of tropical nature unknown to most Britons at the time introduced tropes that still exert their influence today, while the plantation attracted ample attention in its own right. A violent laboratory for new commodities, racial identities, and ways of organizing labour, the plantation was to have profound implications for Caribbean history and the Atlantic world at large. Likewise, the lifestyle of the planters, whose upper echelons became Britain's nouveaux riches, received much comment ranging from admiration to derision.

This class will approach the Caribbean in the 1600s through the lens of the literature produced in those turbulent times. By reading island descriptions, satire, political pamphlets, and Aphra Behn's Oroonoko (arguably the first novel written in English), we will trace contemporaries' views — and incomprehension — of the history unfolding around them. Discussion topics will include bonded labour, race, attitudes towards tropical nature, and consumption. Attempts will be made to clarify the world-historical significance of the seventeenth-century Caribbean, and to highlight that period's relevance for issues like racialized labour and tourism today.

Students are expected to attend the class regularly and to have read the assigned texts. Since our topic requires a solid grasp of developments in seventeenth-century Britain and the Caribbean, students should be prepared to read a fair share of history texts alongside the 'primary' literature. Students seeking to get either an ungraded pass/fail note or 3 credit points have to submit one reading response, once per semester either minutes or a thesis statement, and, at the end of the course, a reflection. Students seeking to get 6 credit points are required to submit a term paper instead of the reflection, in addition to the other course components.

The poetic oeuvres of Mary Oliver and W.S. Merwin are distinguished by their decades-long engagements with the natural world. Though drawing on rather different forms, the lyric poems of both U.S. American writers seek to capture experiences of the nonhuman ranging from familiarity to revelation, from appreciation to crisis.

In this seminar, we will sample the extensive work of both poets by close-reading a range of their nature poems. Discussing notions like place, wilderness, and landscape, we will reflect on the relationship between humanity and nonhuman nature emerging from the poems. We will also inquire into their explicit and implicit politics, exploring issues such as class, ecological destruction, and the ways in which the texts grapple with American history. On occasion, we will tackle more philosophical questions about the concept of nature. Through interpreting the rich work of those two poets, we will address an overarching concern: the significance of nature poetry at the beginning of the twenty-first century. What are the possibilities and potential pitfalls of nature poetry at a historical moment which seems to mark a crisis in human-nature interactions? What, if anything, is the point of reading nature poetry today?

As participants will learn in this seminar, crime and detection in nineteenth-century (British) literature are about much more than just Sherlock Holmes. Rather, they will explore the development of and changing attitudes towards crime, policing, and the detective. They will meet familiar faces - Poe's Dupin, Collins's Sergeant Cuff and of course Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes - and they will investigate the British nation's fascination with both real and fictional murder, theft, and the criminal him-/herself in a century of social change and social challenges. The aim of this seminar is, to provide participants with an understanding of the many facets of crime and detection narratives, of their roots in and connection to the society that produced and devoured them, as well as of the legacy these narratives have left over the decades that followed.

This course will be reading-intensive and regular attendance, as well as active participation in class, are expected.

Leistungsnachweis2/3 ECTSEither:*

You will be expected to write an essay of approx. 4,000 words. Throughout the seminar you will learn to formulate a thesis, develop a structure, research the appropriate literature, and, in the end, produce said essay, which will be concerned with an aspect of the topic in general or a specific sub-topic we discuss. Said thesis, structure, and literature choice will have to be handed in over the course of the semester so that you can develop your essay as we move through the topic. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

Or:

You will be expected to give a presentation, the topic/format of which will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar. Only a limited number of presentation slots are available. The presentation should not exceed 20 mins and should lead to a class discussion. If you are a teacher trainer student, we may discuss other formats of presentation. Your presentation structure and handout will have to be discussed with me before the presentation takes place. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Again, further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

In addition to either of this, you are expected to prepare for each session to enable you to take part in in-class discussions and exercises. You will also be encouraged to provide feedback to others while you yourself will also be given feedback by members of the class.

6 ECTS

If you are taking this course as a 'b-Seminar' you will be required to write an additional module paper of approx. 6,000 words. This may or may not be connected to the topic of this course. If you plan on writing this module paper, please approach me before or after class or send me an email with an idea of the topic you would like to discuss.

The course is designed as an introduction to generic aspects of 20th- and 21st-century poetry. It focuses on basic contemporary methods and approaches of analysis and introduces the students to aesthetic concepts in English poetry roughly after World War II. In its survey character, this course will cover both highlights of British canonized poetry and more marginal voices this approach will include inherent or explicit problematisations of aspects of gender and ethnic identity from canonical and non-canonical anglophone voices of various former British colonial regions.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Waste is generally understood as the mundane, worthless, redundant and discarded afterwards of how we live our lives. In recent years, however, there has been an increasing scholarly interest in how societies relate to waste. Building on this research, this seminar takes as a starting point the fact that we spend a good amount of time in our #ordinary# lives managing waste, and that the problem of how we manage waste is at the heart of the environmental crisis and the development of more sustainable futures. Exploring that which is rejected, we will investigate waste as a dynamic category that needs to be understood in relation to the modern contexts in which it is most commonly found and transformed, and the relationships in which it is embedded. We will also address contemporary innovative practices of reuse, recycling and re#purposing. Through such cultures of renewal, waste products not only acquire a new value and function, but they also become entangled in new social relations and material practices. Waste and garbage thus become metonymic devices for conveying crucial insights into contemporary culture.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

Solidarity once described a strong affiliation with a (political) community. Originating in the worker's movements, the term evolved around what came to be understood as a „collective identity“ that was strongly tied to a cause, often seen as unchanging and fixating political affiliations. As a result, in the industrial era, following a Marxist logic, social movements were believed to be centered in the working class. „New Social Movements“ describe the fluid and transnational participation of a diverse public in changing causes. How is solidarity articulated, if identities are increasingly diverse, multiple, and dispersed across location? How have movements like Fridays For Future, #metoo, Occupy and others harnessed collectivity across identities, time, space? The seminar will discuss theories on solidarity in new social movements and apply them to examples such as the ones mentioned above.

As Germany is slowly waking up from its "colonial amnesia," what are the debates that shake up the collective perception of Berlin, Germany and Europe as postcolonial spaces? What cultures of memory can be re-adapted to address this violent past, be it in the urban landscape or in institutions like museums or universities? How do artistic productions enable transnational vectors of memory that include the voices of descendants of the colonised? This course will start locally with traces of colonialism in Potsdam and Berlin (with an excursion) and open up toward national and transnational memory cultures that engage with the colonial past through performance, poetics and politics. Different avenues in memory studies will be introduced inductively to provide students with a theoretical corpus that will help in understand these particular practices of remembrance.

Please be aware that the course will address violent histories such as war and genocide, but also emotional topics such as racism, positionality and intersectional discrimination. The students are therefore encouraged to inform the course facilitator of anything they think worth mentioning (e.g. psychological sensitivity, positionality, ethics, personal experience with such issues).

California occupies a prominent place in the public imagination, whether in the USA or abroad be it for its Indigenous population, its history as part of a Spanish colony and then a Mexican territory, its (misleading and politically charged) symbolic value as the end of expansion for the USA, for the Gold Rush, the 1960s, the Black Panthers, the Occupation of Alcatraz, for LA and Hollywood, for San Francisco and Silicon Valley, for Death Valley and the Yosemite National Park, for Arnold Schwarzenegger, for countless songs, movies, and novels. This course will examine different depictions of the golden state from relatively contemporary novels - as the site for California Dreaming (whatever that means), for resistance, for individualism, for counterculture, for immigration, for discrimination, for gentrification, for pollution, for crime and for violence.

Violence, its representation and consumption is omnipresent in U.S. American culture. It lies at the heart of the very foundational myths that constitute American national identity. In fact violence has been variously described as an inherent part of the formation of nation states. Today, violence has lost most of its beneficial ascriptions and its rejection has become the epitome of civilization. Nonetheless, the spectacle of violence fascinates today as much as it did in the past (a phenomenon which perpetually startles scholars). But what really is violence? And what role do aesthetics play in the meaning and understanding of violence? A first and crucial part of this seminar will be to distinguish conceptually between the different forms of violence that we will be talking about. Starting with theories of violence, the course will attempt to trace violence as cultural performance and practices through various stages of U.S. history. Our seminar readings and discussions will focus on the different understandings and representations of violence in texts that span from the colonial era to the present and explore the politics and aesthetics of such representations. We will read excerpts from scholars such as Walter Benjamin, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, Susan Sontag, Judith Butler, Richard Slotkin, Wolfgang Sofsky, and J.P. Remtsma.

The course introduces into a period of crucial transition in Britain from the early 20th to the 21st century, a century of immense, thorough social, political, cultural changes, challenges and threats. We will focus on social, cultural and literary phenomena and follow up some major developments throughout the 20th century. Modernism, World War I/II, Cold War are only a few keywords that relate to this course project and find repercussions in a wide range of partly controversial experimental and avantgarde trends in arts (incl. literature). In literature, this primarily relates to a rejection of 19th-century traditions and conventions and a termination of the previous consensus between author and reader in traditional realism. Modernists, then, regarded themselves as a cosmopolitan avantgarde subverting bourgeois values. This subversion was expressed both in complex formal experiment and in provocative subject matter such as urban cultural dislocation. The realism-based continuity of chronological development was challenged; new ways of tracing the flow of characters' thoughts found expression in the stream-of-consciousness technique. Complex collages of fragmentary images substituted allusions to logical, teleological exposition of thoughts and can be read as repercussions of the writers' alert awareness of new anthropological and psychological theories. The trauma of World War I and II and the Holocaust as well as the Cold War left repercussions in the arts too, for sure and certainly contributed to the development of postmodernist aesthetics. During the course, we will problematise aspects of these transitions. We will look (a) into concepts of modernism/postmodernism and (b) investigate into innovative (post)modernist aesthetic impulses in canonical and noncanonical texts/writers. Changing gender concepts as well as aspects of representations of the British Empire will be of reoccurring interest.

The course is designed as an introduction to generic aspects of 20th- and 21st-century poetry. It focuses on basic contemporary methods and approaches of analysis and introduces the students to aesthetic concepts in English poetry roughly after World War II. In its survey character, this course will cover both highlights of British canonized poetry and more marginal voices this approach will include inherent or explicit problematisations of aspects of gender and ethnic identity from canonical and non-canonical anglophone voices of various former British colonial regions.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Die Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften bringen in Kontakt: Text und Welt, Text und Theorie, Text und Bild, Texte verschiedener Sprachen, Epochen, kultureller Dispositive... ‚Komparatistisches‘ Arbeiten gehört in den Geisteswissenschaften zum täglich Brot. Wie schon im Namen Kom-paratistik eingeschrieben, ist diese Praxis getragen von einem unhintergehbaren MITEINANDER – nicht nur von Abstrakta wie ‚Texten‘ oder ‚Disziplinen‘, sondern von Menschen, ihren Projekten und Interessen, ihrer je eigenen Ansteckungskraft und Empfänglichkeit für das ihnen Begegnende. Die Ringveranstaltung soll eine Stätte bieten, die Potsdamer komparatistischen Kontaktflächen über die Disziplinen hinweg gemeinsam zu erleben und auszuprobieren. In regelmäßigem Rhythmus werden Kolleg*innen aus den verschiedenen Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften (AVL, Anglistik, Germanistik, Romanistik, Slavistik) ihre je spezifische komparatistische Kontaktfläche vorstellen. Die Wochen ohne Vorlesungstermin werden zur Lektüre von ausgewählten Texten genutzt, die wir uns gemeinsam erarbeiten möchten. Ziel der als Kooperation der Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften organisierten Ringveranstaltung ist, die Menschen – Studierende wie Lehrende – die rund um das Neue Palais alltäglich zwischen den Disziplinen und Künsten wandeln, auf Tuchfühlung und ins Gespräch zu bringen.

As Germany is slowly waking up from its "colonial amnesia," what are the debates that shake up the collective perception of Berlin, Germany and Europe as postcolonial spaces? What cultures of memory can be re-adapted to address this violent past, be it in the urban landscape or in institutions like museums or universities? How do artistic productions enable transnational vectors of memory that include the voices of descendants of the colonised? This course will start locally with traces of colonialism in Potsdam and Berlin (with an excursion) and open up toward national and transnational memory cultures that engage with the colonial past through performance, poetics and politics. Different avenues in memory studies will be introduced inductively to provide students with a theoretical corpus that will help in understand these particular practices of remembrance.

Please be aware that the course will address violent histories such as war and genocide, but also emotional topics such as racism, positionality and intersectional discrimination. The students are therefore encouraged to inform the course facilitator of anything they think worth mentioning (e.g. psychological sensitivity, positionality, ethics, personal experience with such issues).

- In course assessment: Students enrolled in Seminar 1 will be asked to submit an annotated reflection (800 words) on a discussion subject addressed during the course by 15th February (Testat not graded). Students enrolled in Seminar 2 will be asked to submit an annotated reflection (800 words) on a discussion subject addressed during the course by 15th February (Modulprüfung graded).
- Final assessment: Students who signed up for AM-BK-b (9 LP with Portfolioprüfung) have two options:
 OPTION 1: submit a long essay (Hausarbeit) of 4-5,000 words (13-16 pages, 1,5 spacing) by 1st April 2020. If they wish, a slot can be allocated for students eager to present their ideas during the course and get feedback from the group and the course facilitator (5 min presentation, direct and indirect feedback).
 OPTION 2: Develop a memory project: through a medium (video, photo, artwork, brochure, performance, advertisement...), a student remembers a moment, events, a particular feature of colonial history, or people implicated in this history. The students are invited to connect their project with current local cultural and political debates on racism, genocide and museum collections. Next to it, students must write a reflection on the project, engaging with self-positioning and challenges encountered (1,500 to 2000 words, with a short bibliography).
 The course facilitator will provide an assessment grid that will lay bare what is roughly expected of these projects.

The political situation that emerged after the Second World War is often represented as a conflict between two superpowers – but how was the Cold War viewed from the global South? In this seminar, we will read scholarly and novelistic responses to this question. What happens when we draw forward the perspectives of those whose role in the cold war is often presented as minor, marginal or passive? We will try to reconsider the relationship between the cold war and the postcolonial, with a particular focus on perspectives from India and South Africa. Students should have access to Nadine Gordimer's July's People , and I. Allan Sealy's The Brainfever Bird and begin reading them as soon as possible. Other readings will be provided.

Please follow the "comment" link above for more information on comments, course readings, course requirements and grading. The seventeenth century saw Britain's entry to the imperial war zone of the Caribbean. Capturing colonizers' imagination, the region became the object of numerous pieces of writings. Descriptions of tropical nature unknown to most Britons at the time introduced tropes that still exert their influence today, while the plantation attracted ample attention in its own right. A violent laboratory for new commodities, racial identities, and ways of organizing labour, the plantation was to have profound implications for Caribbean history and the Atlantic world at large. Likewise, the lifestyle of the planters, whose upper echelons became Britain's nouveaux riches, received much comment ranging from admiration to derision. This class will approach the Caribbean in the 1600s through the lens of the literature produced in those turbulent times. By reading island descriptions, satire, political pamphlets, and Aphra Behn's Oroonoko (arguably the first novel written in English), we will trace contemporaries' views — and incomprehension — of the history unfolding around them. Discussion topics will include bonded labour, race, attitudes towards tropical nature, and consumption. Attempts will be made to clarify the world-historical significance of the seventeenth-century Caribbean, and to highlight that period's relevance for issues like racialized labour and tourism today.

Since our topic requires a solid grasp of developments in seventeenth-century Britain and the Caribbean, students should be prepared to read a fair share of history texts alongside the 'primary' literature. Students seeking to get either an ungraded pass/fail note or 3 credit points have to submit one reading response, once per semester either minutes or a thesis statement, and, at the end of the course, a reflection. Students seeking to get 6 credit points are required to submit a term paper instead of the reflection, in addition to the other course components.

California occupies a prominent place in the public imagination, whether in the USA or abroad be it for its Indigenous population, its history as part of a Spanish colony and then a Mexican territory, its (misleading and politically charged) symbolic value as the end of expansion for the USA, for the Gold Rush, the 1960s, the Black Panthers, the Occupation of Alcatraz, for LA and Hollywood, for San Francisco and Silicon Valley, for Death Valley and the Yosemite National Park, for Arnold Schwarzenegger, for countless songs, movies, and novels. This course will examine different depictions of the golden state from relatively contemporary novels - as the site for California Dreaming (whatever that means), for resistance, for individualism, for counterculture, for immigration, for discrimination, for gentrification, for pollution, for crime and for violence.

In den 1910er Jahren verlagerte sich die prosperierende Filmproduktion der Vereinigten Staaten an die Westküste, Hollywood wurde zum Synonym für ein erfolgreiches Filmbusiness. In Sowjetrußland hemmten Revolution und Bürgerkrieg zunächst die Filmproduktion, die dann aber – staatlich gefördert – rasch aufblühte. Trotzdem hätte der berühmte Sergej #jzenštejn 1930 gerne in Hollywood einen Film gedreht, der sowjetische Filmminister Šumjatskij träumte sogar von einem „sowjetischen Hollywood“. Hollywood war Vor- und Feindbild. In der Sowjetunion wie in den USA gab es Filme, die z. T. als deutliche Konkurrenz zueinander konzipiert waren, und man zeigte den ideologischen Gegner nicht von einer vorteilhaftesten Seite. Die Vorlesung zeichnet nach, welche Filme auf welche Filme reagierten und wie in den USA entwickelte Genres (Musical-Film, Western, ...) auch im sowjetischen Kino heimisch gemacht wurden. Gezeigt wird auch, wie die unterschiedlichen Filmkulturen es einem sowjetischen Regisseur in den 1980er Jahren schwer machten, in den USA erfolgreich zu werden.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

The poetic oeuvres of Mary Oliver and W.S. Merwin are distinguished by their decades-long engagements with the natural world. Though drawing on rather different forms, the lyric poems of both U.S. American writers seek to capture experiences of the nonhuman ranging from familiarity to revelation, from appreciation to crisis.

In this seminar, we will sample the extensive work of both poets by close-reading a range of their nature poems. Discussing notions like place, wilderness, and landscape, we will reflect on the relationship between humanity and nonhuman nature emerging from the poems. We will also inquire into their explicit and implicit politics, exploring issues such as class, ecological destruction, and the ways in which the texts grapple with American history. On occasion, we will tackle more philosophical questions about the concept of nature. Through interpreting the rich work of those two poets, we will address an overarching concern: the significance of nature poetry at the beginning of the twenty-first century. What are the possibilities and potential pitfalls of nature poetry at a historical moment which seems to mark a crisis in human-nature interactions? What, if anything, is the point of reading nature poetry today?

Epidemics have always at the same time terrified and fascinated mankind. This block seminar focuses on the cultural impact of epidemic diseases on U.S. society from the yellow fever epidemics of the 18th century to the HIV/AIDS crisis and the recent experience of SARS and swine flu (H5N1). We will look at the way narratives about contagion and epidemics function as a means to demarcate socio-cultural Otherness as well as national identity formations and belonging. We will analyze literary representations of epidemics by Edgar Allan Poe, Susan Sontag, John Edgar Wideman and others as well as filmic representations such as Wolfgang Petersen's Outbreak (1995) and Steven Soderbergh's Contagion (2011).

As participants will learn in this seminar, crime and detection in nineteenth-century (British) literature are about much more than just Sherlock Holmes. Rather, they will explore the development of and changing attitudes towards crime, policing, and the detective. They will meet familiar faces - Poe's Dupin, Collins's Sergeant Cuff and of course Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes - and they will investigate the British nation's fascination with both real and fictional murder, theft, and the criminal him-/herself in a century of social change and social challenges. The aim of this seminar is, to provide participants with an understanding of the many facets of crime and detection narratives, of their roots in and connection to the society that produced and devoured them, as well as of the legacy these narratives have left over the decades that followed.

This course will be reading-intensive and regular attendance, as well as active participation in class, are expected.

Leistungsnachweis2/3 ECTS

Either:

You will be expected to write an essay of approx. 4,000 words. Throughout the seminar you will learn to formulate a thesis, develop a structure, research the appropriate literature, and, in the end, produce said essay, which will be concerned with an aspect of the topic in general or a specific sub-topic we discuss. Said thesis, structure, and literature choice will have to be handed in over the course of the semester so that you can develop your essay as we move through the topic. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

Or:

You will be expected to give a presentation, the topic/format of which will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar. Only a limited number of presentation slots are available. The presentation should not exceed 20 mins and should lead to a class discussion. If you are a teacher trainer student, we may discuss other formats of presentation. Your presentation structure and handout will have to be discussed with me before the presentation takes place. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Again, further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

In addition to either of this, you are expected to prepare for each session to enable you to take part in in-class discussions and exercises. You will also be encouraged to provide feedback to others while you yourself will also be given feedback by members of the class.

6 ECTS

If you are taking this course as a 'b-Seminar' you will be required to write an additional module paper of approx. 6,000 words. This may or may not be connected to the topic of this course. If you plan on writing this module paper, please approach me before or after class or send me an email with an idea of the topic you would like to discuss.

The last decades have seen an upsurge of autobiographical writing as well as of multimedia self-presentations by disabled persons. This seminar focuses on female British authors' verbal, graphic and digital autobiographies which depict life stories shaped by physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities. "Disability" will be introduced as a fluid, intersectional identity category (a category intersecting with gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity/race) that challenges the binary opposition between "disabled" and "non-disabled", "normal" or "able-bodied". The seminar deals with the broader subject of disability as a new category in cultural and literary studies as well as with disability autobiography as a multimedia genre. We will analyse verbal, graphic and digital forms of autobiographies by investigating their narrative structures and by exploring them as creative responses to the ableist, mentalist, sexist, racist and heteronormative representations of women with physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities in medical discourse and the media. Furthermore, we discuss if (and how) the self-presentations in different media produce and perform unexpected, novel, controversial and strongly interactive images of bio- and neurodiversity.

The course introduces into a period of crucial transition in Britain from the early 20th to the 21st century, a century of immense, thorough social, political, cultural changes, challenges and threats. We will focus on social, cultural and literary phenomena and follow up some major developments throughout the 20th century. Modernism, World War I/II, Cold War are only a few keywords that relate to this course project and find repercussions in a wide range of partly controversial experimental and avantgarde trends in arts (incl. literature). In literature, this primarily relates to a rejection of 19th-century traditions and conventions and a termination of the previous consensus between author and reader in traditional realism. Modernists, then, regarded themselves as a cosmopolitan avantgarde subverting bourgeois values. This subversion was expressed both in complex formal experiment and in provocative subject matter such as urban cultural dislocation. The realism-based continuity of chronological development was challenged; new ways of tracing the flow of characters' thoughts found expression in the stream-of-consciousness technique. Complex collages of fragmentary images substituted allusions to logical, teleological exposition of thoughts and can be read as repercussions of the writers' alert awareness of new anthropological and psychological theories. The trauma of World War I and II and the Holocaust as well as the Cold War left repercussions in the arts too, for sure and certainly contributed to the development of postmodernist aesthetics.

During the course, we will problematise aspects of these transitions. We will look (a) into concepts of modernism/postmodernism and (b) investigate into innovative (post)modernist aesthetic impulses in canonical and noncanonical texts/writers. Changing gender concepts as well as aspects of representations of the British Empire will be of reoccurring interest.

The course is designed as an introduction to generic aspects of 20th- and 21st-century poetry. It focuses on basic contemporary methods and approaches of analysis and introduces the students to aesthetic concepts in English poetry roughly after World War II. In its survey character, this course will cover both highlights of British canonized poetry and more marginal voices this approach will include inherent or explicit problematisations of aspects of gender and ethnic identity from canonical and non-canonical anglophone voices of various former British colonial regions.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Die Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften bringen in Kontakt: Text und Welt, Text und Theorie, Text und Bild, Texte verschiedener Sprachen, Epochen, kultureller Dispositive... 'Komparatistisches' Arbeiten gehört in den Geisteswissenschaften zum täglich Brot. Wie schon im Namen Kom-paratistik eingeschrieben, ist diese Praxis getragen von einem unhintergehbaren MITEINANDER – nicht nur von Abstrakta wie 'Texten' oder 'Disziplinen', sondern von Menschen, ihren Projekten und Interessen, ihrer je eigenen Ansteckungskraft und Empfänglichkeit für das ihnen Begegnende. Die Ringveranstaltung soll eine Stätte bieten, die Potsdamer komparatistischen Kontaktflächen über die Disziplinen hinweg gemeinsam zu erleben und auszuprobieren. In regelmäßigem Rhythmus werden Kolleg*innen aus den verschiedenen Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften (AVL, Anglistik, Germanistik, Romanistik, Slavistik) ihre je spezifische komparatistische Kontaktfläche vorstellen. Die Wochen ohne Vorlesungstermin werden zur Lektüre von ausgewählten Texten genutzt, die wir uns gemeinsam erarbeiten möchten. Ziel der als Kooperation der Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften organisierten Ringveranstaltung ist, die Menschen – Studierende wie Lehrende – die rund um das Neue Palais alltäglich zwischen den Disziplinen und Künsten wandeln, auf Tuchfühlung und ins Gespräch zu bringen.

Travel had always been a vital element in the process of self-cultivation held high in Enlightenment thinking, as epitomized in the Grand Tour taken to Italy. But what happened to such lofty ideals when travel and travel literature became more and more popular in the course of the 19th century? It is in some of the most widely read authors of the century that numerous identity-related ambiguities and ambivalences became evident as these writers went on tour, attempting to situate themselves between established ideas of high culture and the demands of the market-place. This course will focus on extended journeys taken by Charles Dickens, Mark Twain and Oscar Wilde as documented in self-authored travelogues and newspaper reports. Various other contemporary voices will be considered as well.

The political situation that emerged after the Second World War is often represented as a conflict between two superpowers – but how was the Cold War viewed from the global South? In this seminar, we will read scholarly and novelistic responses to this question. What happens when we draw forward the perspectives of those whose role in the cold war is often presented as minor, marginal or passive? We will try to reconsider the relationship between the cold war and the postcolonial, with a particular focus on perspectives from India and South Africa. Students should have access to Nadine Gordimer's July's People, and I. Allan Sealy's The Brainfever Bird and begin reading them as soon as possible. Other readings will be provided.

What does it mean to read the manifesto as a literary-cultural text? What makes a manifesto, and which tools best guide us through such documents? In this seminar, we will approach the manifesto through questions of genre, voice and narrative. We will try to develop an understanding-in-progress of its generic specifications, and the uses to which they are put. We will read a varied ion of manifestos, including artistic, feminist, and political. The seminar will be moderate in reading load, but will require a high level of class participation, as students will also be asked to find and present a manifesto of their own choosing, as well as attempt to write their own.

The seventeenth century saw Britain's entry to the imperial war zone of the Caribbean. Capturing colonizers' imagination, the region became the object of numerous pieces of writings. Descriptions of tropical nature unknown to most Britons at the time introduced tropes that still exert their influence today, while the plantation attracted ample attention in its own right. A violent laboratory for new commodities, racial identities, and ways of organizing labour, the plantation was to have profound implications for Caribbean history and the Atlantic world at large. Likewise, the lifestyle of the planters, whose upper echelons became Britain's nouveaux riches, received much comment ranging from admiration to derision.

This class will approach the Caribbean in the 1600s through the lens of the literature produced in those turbulent times. By reading island descriptions, satire, political pamphlets, and Aphra Behn's Oroonoko (arguably the first novel written in English), we will trace contemporaries' views — and incomprehension — of the history unfolding around them. Discussion topics will include bonded labour, race, attitudes towards tropical nature, and consumption. Attempts will be made to clarify the world-historical significance of the seventeenth-century Caribbean, and to highlight that period's relevance for issues like racialized labour and tourism today.

The poetic oeuvres of Mary Oliver and W.S. Merwin are distinguished by their decades-long engagements with the natural world. Though drawing on rather different forms, the lyric poems of both U.S. American writers seek to capture experiences of the nonhuman ranging from familiarity to revelation, from appreciation to crisis.

In this seminar, we will sample the extensive work of both poets by close-reading a range of their nature poems. Discussing notions like place, wilderness, and landscape, we will reflect on the relationship between humanity and nonhuman nature emerging from the poems. We will also inquire into their explicit and implicit politics, exploring issues such as class, ecological destruction, and the ways in which the texts grapple with American history. On occasion, we will tackle more philosophical questions about the concept of nature. Through interpreting the rich work of those two poets, we will address an overarching concern: the significance of nature poetry at the beginning of the twenty-first century. What are the possibilities and potential pitfalls of nature poetry at a historical moment which seems to mark a crisis in human-nature interactions? What, if anything, is the point of reading nature poetry today?

As participants will learn in this seminar, crime and detection in nineteenth-century (British) literature are about much more than just Sherlock Holmes. Rather, they will explore the development of and changing attitudes towards crime, policing, and the detective. They will meet familiar faces - Poe's Dupin, Collins's Sergeant Cuff and of course Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes - and they will investigate the British nation's fascination with both real and fictional murder, theft, and the criminal him-/herself in a century of social change and social challenges. The aim of this seminar is, to provide participants with an understanding of the many facets of crime and detection narratives, of their roots in and connection to the society that produced and devoured them, as well as of the legacy these narratives have left over the decades that followed.

This course will be reading-intensive and regular attendance, as well as active participation in class, are expected.

Leistungsnachweis2/3 ECTSEither:*

You will be expected to write an essay of approx. 4,000 words. Throughout the seminar you will learn to formulate a thesis, develop a structure, research the appropriate literature, and, in the end, produce said essay, which will be concerned with an aspect of the topic in general or a specific sub-topic we discuss. Said thesis, structure, and literature choice will have to be handed in over the course of the semester so that you can develop your essay as we move through the topic. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

Or:

You will be expected to give a presentation, the topic/format of which will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar. Only a limited number of presentation slots are available. The presentation should not exceed 20 mins and should lead to a class discussion. If you are a teacher trainer student, we may discuss other formats of presentation. Your presentation structure and handout will have to be discussed with me before the presentation takes place. This is compulsory in order to pass this course. Again, further details will be discussed at the beginning of the seminar.

In addition to either of this, you are expected to prepare for each session to enable you to take part in in-class discussions and exercises. You will also be encouraged to provide feedback to others while you yourself will also be given feedback by members of the class.

6 ECTS

If you are taking this course as a 'b-Seminar' you will be required to write an additional module paper of approx. 6,000 words. This may or may not be connected to the topic of this course. If you plan on writing this module paper, please approach me before or after class or send me an email with an idea of the topic you would like to discuss.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Waste is generally understood as the mundane, worthless, redundant and discarded afterwards of how we live our lives. In recent years, however, there has been an increasing scholarly interest in how societies relate to waste. Building on this research, this seminar takes as a starting point the fact that we spend a good amount of time in our #ordinary# lives managing waste, and that the problem of how we manage waste is at the heart of the environmental crisis and the development of more sustainable futures. Exploring that which is rejected, we will investigate waste as a dynamic category that needs to be understood in relation to the modern contexts in which it is most commonly found and transformed, and the relationships in which it is embedded. We will also address contemporary innovative practices of reuse, recycling and re#purposing. Through such cultures of renewal, waste products not only acquire a new value and function, but they also become entangled in new social relations and material practices. Waste and garbage thus become metonymic devices for conveying crucial insights into contemporary culture.

Originating in the worker's movements, the term evolved around what came to be understood as a „collective identity“ that was strongly tied to a cause, often seen as unchanging and fixating political affiliations. As a result, in the industrial era, following a Marxist logic, social movements were believed to be centered in the working class. „New Social Movements“ describe the fluid and transnational participation of a diverse public in changing causes. How is solidarity articulated, if identities are increasingly diverse, multiple, and dispersed across location? How have movements like Fridays For Future, #metoo, Occupy and others harnessed collectivity across identities, time, space? The seminar will discuss theories on solidarity in new social movements and apply them to examples such as the ones mentioned above.

What cultures of memory can be re-adapted to address this violent past, be it in the urban landscape or in institutions like museums or universities? How do artistic productions enable transnational vectors of memory that include the voices of descendants of the colonised? This course will start locally with traces of colonialism in Potsdam and Berlin (with an excursion) and open up toward national and transnational memory cultures that engage with the colonial past through performance, poetics and politics. Different avenues in memory studies will be introduced inductively to provide students with a theoretical corpus that will help in understand these particular practices of remembrance. Please be aware that the course will address violent histories such as war and genocide, but also emotional topics such as racism, positionality and intersectional discrimination. The students are therefore encouraged to inform the course facilitator of anything they think worth mentioning (e.g. psychological sensitivity, positionality, ethics, personal experience with such issues).

California occupies a prominent place in the public imagination, whether in the USA or abroad be it for its Indigenous population, its history as part of a Spanish colony and then a Mexican territory, its (misleading and politically charged) symbolic value as the end of expansion for the USA, for the Gold Rush, the 1960s, the Black Panthers, the Occupation of Alcatraz, for LA and Hollywood, for San Francisco and Silicon Valley, for Death Valley and the Yosemite National Park, for Arnold Schwarzenegger, for countless songs, movies, and novels. This course will examine different depictions of the golden state from relatively contemporary novels - as the site for California Dreaming (whatever that means), for resistance, for individualism, for counterculture, for immigration, for discrimination, for gentrification, for pollution, for crime and for violence.

Violence, its representation and consumption is omnipresent in U.S. American culture. It lies at the heart of the very foundational myths that constitute American national identity. In fact violence has been variously described as an inherent part of the formation of nation states. Today, violence has lost most of its beneficial ascriptions and its rejection has become the epitome of civilization. Nonetheless, the spectacle of violence fascinates today as much as it did in the past (a phenomenon which perpetually startles scholars). But what really is violence? And what role do aesthetics play in the meaning and understanding of violence? A first and crucial part of this seminar will be to distinguish conceptually between the different forms of violence that we will be talking about. Starting with theories of violence, the course will attempt to trace violence as cultural performance and practices through various stages of U.S. history. Our seminar readings and discussions will focus on the different understandings and representations of violence in texts that span from the colonial era to the present and explore the politics and aesthetics of such representations. We will read excerpts from scholars such as Walter Benjamin, Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak, Susan Sontag, Judith Butler, Richard Slotkin, Wolfgang Iser, and J.P. Remtsma.

This course will provide the introduction to a spectrum of concepts and issues connected to the (Trans)Pacific Studies focusing on the nineteenth century exploration, colonization and their aftermaths in the region. The postcolonial theories and concepts which will be discussed in the seminar will enable the students to get experience in their practical application as well as the critical work with historical (colonial) texts.

The course introduces into a period of crucial transition in Britain from the early 20th to the 21st century, a century of immense, thorough social, political, cultural changes, challenges and threats.

We will focus on social, cultural and literary phenomena and follow up some major developments throughout the 20th century. Modernism, World War I/II, Cold War are only a few keywords that relate to this course project and find repercussions in a wide range of partly controversial experimental and avantgarde trends in arts (incl. literature). In literature, this primarily relates to a rejection of 19th-century traditions and conventions and a termination of the previous consensus between author and reader in traditional realism. Modernists, then, regarded themselves as a cosmopolitan avantgarde subverting bourgeois values. This subversion was expressed both in complex formal experiment and in provocative subject matter such as urban cultural dislocation. The realism-based continuity of chronological development was challenged; new ways of tracing the flow of characters' thoughts found expression in the stream-of-consciousness technique. Complex collages of fragmentary images substituted allusions to logical, teleological exposition of thoughts and can be read as repercussions of the writers' alert awareness of new anthropological and psychological theories. The trauma of World War I and II and the Holocaust as well as the Cold War left repercussions in the arts too, for sure and certainly contributed to the development of postmodernist aesthetics.

During the course, we will problematise aspects of these transitions. We will look (a) into concepts of modernism/postmodernism and (b) investigate into innovative (post)modernist aesthetic impulses in canonical and noncanonical texts/writers. Changing gender concepts as well as aspects of representations of the British Empire will be of reoccurring interest.

The course is designed as an introduction to generic aspects of 20th- and 21st-century poetry. It focuses on basic contemporary methods and approaches of analysis and introduces the students to aesthetic concepts in English poetry roughly after World War II. In its survey character, this course will cover both highlights of British canonized poetry and more marginal voices this approach will include inherent or explicit problematisations of aspects of gender and ethnic identity from canonical and non-canonical anglophone voices of various former British colonial regions.

The mass migration of South Asian communities to Britain from the 1960s onwards has added a new dimension to discussions of 'culture', 'identity', 'nation' and 'politics'. Like the immigrant communities from other parts of the former British Empire (such as the Caribbean, or East and West Africa), the South Asian diaspora has effectively enabled the emergence of a multi-ethnic, culturally diverse and essentially postcolonial Britain, whose most popular 'national' dish is no longer fish and chips but chicken tikka masala. At the same time, however, the experience of British people who share a sense of belonging to South Asia is mediated by coloniality and marked by xenophobia, racism and (in many cases) Islamophobia.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a sample of texts – novels, short stories, poems, song lyrics, films – written by authors from the South Asian diaspora in Britain. Concentrating on the period from ca. 1990 to the present, we will explore the poetics and politics of multiple diasporic aesthetics ranging from hybrid writing styles to magical realism and social documentary.

Caution: This is a reading-intensive seminar with an assignment of four novels, some shorter fiction, and a range of theory and secondary material.

Die Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften bringen in Kontakt: Text und Welt, Text und Theorie, Text und Bild, Texte verschiedener Sprachen, Epochen, kultureller Dispositive... ‚Komparatistisches‘ Arbeiten gehört in den Geisteswissenschaften zum täglich Brot. Wie schon im Namen Kom-paratistik eingeschrieben, ist diese Praxis getragen von einem unhintergehbaren MITEINANDER – nicht nur von Abstrakta wie ‚Texten‘ oder ‚Disziplinen‘, sondern von Menschen, ihren Projekten und Interessen, ihrer je eigenen Ansteckungskraft und Empfänglichkeit für das ihnen Begegnende. Die Ringveranstaltung soll eine Stätte bieten, die Potsdamer komparatistischen Kontaktflächen über die Disziplinen hinweg gemeinsam zu erleben und auszuprobieren. In regelmäßigem Rhythmus werden Kolleg*innen aus den verschiedenen Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften (AVL, Anglistik, Germanistik, Romanistik, Slavistik) ihre je spezifische komparatistische Kontaktfläche vorstellen. Die Wochen ohne Vorlesungstermin werden zur Lektüre von ausgewählten Texten genutzt, die wir uns gemeinsam erarbeiten möchten. Ziel der als Kooperation der Potsdamer Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften organisierten Ringveranstaltung ist, die Menschen – Studierende wie Lehrende – die rund um das Neue Palais alltäglich zwischen den Disziplinen und Künsten wandeln, auf Tuchfühlung und ins Gespräch zu bringen.

As Germany is slowly waking up from its "colonial amnesia," what are the debates that shake up the collective perception of Berlin, Germany and Europe as postcolonial spaces? What cultures of memory can be re-adapted to address this violent past, be it in the urban landscape or in institutions like museums or universities? How do artistic productions enable transnational vectors of memory that include the voices of descendants of the colonised? This course will start locally with traces of colonialism in Potsdam and Berlin (with an excursion) and open up toward national and transnational memory cultures that engage with the colonial past through performance, poetics and politics. Different avenues in memory studies will be introduced inductively to provide students with a theoretical corpus that will help in understand these particular practices of remembrance.

Please be aware that the course will address violent histories such as war and genocide, but also emotional topics such as racism, positionality and intersectional discrimination. The students are therefore encouraged to inform the course facilitator of anything they think worth mentioning (e.g. psychological sensitivity, positionality, ethics, personal experience with such issues).

- In course assessment: Students enrolled in Seminar 1 will be asked to submit an annotated reflection (800 words) on a discussion subject addressed during the course by 15th February (Testat not graded). Students enrolled in Seminar 2 will be asked to submit an annotated reflection (800 words) on a discussion subject addressed during the course by 15th February (Modulprüfung graded).
- Final assessment: Students who signed up for AM-BK-b (9 LP with Portfolioprüfung) have two options:
 OPTION 1: submit a long essay (Hausarbeit) of 4-5,000 words (13-16 pages, 1,5 spacing) by 1st April 2020. If they wish, a slot can be allocated for students eager to present their ideas during the course and get feedback from the group and the course facilitator (5 min presentation, direct and indirect feedback).
 OPTION 2: Develop a memory project: through a medium (video, photo, artwork, brochure, performance, advertisement...), a student remembers a moment, events, a particular feature of colonial history, or people implicated in this history. The students are invited to connect their project with current local cultural and political debates on racism, genocide and museum collections. Next to it, students must write a reflection on the project, engaging with self-positioning and challenges encountered (1,500 to 2000 words, with a short bibliography).
 The course facilitator will provide an assessment grid that will lay bare what is roughly expected of these projects.

The political situation that emerged after the Second World War is often represented as a conflict between two superpowers – but how was the Cold War viewed from the global South? In this seminar, we will read scholarly and novelistic responses to this question. What happens when we draw forward the perspectives of those whose role in the cold war is often presented as minor, marginal or passive? We will try to reconsider the relationship between the cold war and the postcolonial, with a particular focus on perspectives from India and South Africa. Please follow the "comment" link above for more information on comments, course readings, course requirements and grading. The seventeenth century saw Britain's entry to the imperial war zone of the Caribbean. Capturing colonizers' imagination, the region became the object of numerous pieces of writings. Descriptions of tropical nature unknown to most Britons at the time introduced tropes that still exert their influence today, while the plantation attracted ample attention in its own right. A violent laboratory for new commodities, racial identities, and ways of organizing labour, the plantation was to have profound implications for Caribbean history and the Atlantic world at large. Likewise, the lifestyle of the planters, whose upper echelons became Britain's nouveaux riches, received much comment ranging from admiration to derision. This class will approach the Caribbean in the 1600s through the lens of the literature produced in those turbulent times. By reading island descriptions, satire, political pamphlets, and Aphra Behn's Oroonoko (arguably the first novel written in English), we will trace contemporaries' views — and incomprehension — of the history unfolding around them. Discussion topics will include bonded labour, race, attitudes towards tropical nature, and consumption. Attempts will be made to clarify the world-historical significance of the seventeenth-century Caribbean, and to highlight that period's relevance for issues like racialized labour and tourism today.

Students are expected to attend the class regularly and to have read the assigned texts. Since our topic requires a solid grasp of developments in seventeenth-century Britain and the Caribbean, students should be prepared to read a fair share of history texts alongside the 'primary' literature. Students seeking to get either an ungraded pass/fail note or 3 credit points have to submit one reading response, once per semester either minutes or a thesis statement, and, at the end of the course, a reflection. Students seeking to get 6 credit points are required to submit a term paper instead of the reflection, in addition to the other course components.

Glossar

Die folgenden Begriffserklärungen zu Prüfungsleistung, Prüfungsnebenleistung und Studienleistung gelten im Bezug auf Lehrveranstaltungen für alle Ordnungen, die seit dem WiSe 2013/14 in Kraft getreten sind.

Prüfungsleistung	Prüfungsleistungen sind benotete Leistungen innerhalb eines Moduls. Aus der Benotung der Prüfungsleistung(en) bildet sich die Modulnote, die in die Gesamtnote des Studiengangs eingeht. Handelt es sich um eine unbenotete Prüfungsleistung, so muss dieses ausdrücklich („unbenotet“) in der Modulbeschreibung der fachspezifischen Ordnung geregelt sein. Weitere Informationen, auch zu den Anmeldeöglichkeiten von Prüfungsleistungen, finden Sie unter anderem in der Kommentierung der BaMa-O
Prüfungsnebenleistung	Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind für den Abschluss eines Moduls relevante Leistungen, die – soweit sie vorgesehen sind – in der Modulbeschreibung der fachspezifischen Ordnung beschrieben sind. Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind immer unbenotet und werden lediglich mit "bestanden" bzw. "nicht bestanden" bewertet. Die Modulbeschreibung regelt, ob die Prüfungsnebenleistung eine Teilnahmevoraussetzung für eine Modulprüfung oder eine Abschlussvoraussetzung für ein ganzes Modul ist. Als Teilnahmevoraussetzung für eine Modulprüfung muss die Prüfungsnebenleistung erfolgreich vor der Anmeldung bzw. Teilnahme an der Modulprüfung erbracht worden sein. Auch für Erbringung einer Prüfungsnebenleistungen wird eine Anmeldung vorausgesetzt. Diese fällt immer mit der Belegung der Lehrveranstaltung zusammen, da Prüfungsnebenleistung im Rahmen einer Lehrveranstaltungen absolviert werden. Sieht also Ihre fachspezifische Ordnung Prüfungsnebenleistungen bei Lehrveranstaltungen vor, sind diese Lehrveranstaltungen zwingend zu belegen, um die Prüfungsnebenleistung absolvieren zu können.
Studienleistung	Als Studienleistung werden Leistungen bezeichnet, die weder Prüfungsleistungen noch Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind.
