Bemerkung

Instructors of North American English: Prickett, Terpolilli

- If you are interested in North American English or have had an extensive stay in the United States or Canada, you should attend a section of "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck I" (Basismodul; BM-SA; Sprachpraxis 1) with Dr. Prickett or Mr. Terpolilli

Instructors of British English: Göldner, Hirsch, Thompson

- If you are interested in British English or have had an extensive stay in the UK, Ireland, Australia, or South Africa, you should attend a section of "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck I" (Basismodul; BM-SA; Sprachpraxis 1) with Dr Göldner, Dr Hirsch, or Ms Thompson

Lerninhalte

This course centers on level-appropriate English pronunciation. Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able

- to identify and correct major pronunciation problems in English (either American or British English)
- to improve their pronunciation of individual sounds or groups of sounds
- to pronounce individual words correctly in connected speech
- to speak English with proper intonation

Students are required to submit assignments on a regular basis. Independent study is an integral component of the course. Students are strongly encouraged to attend the Independent Pronunciation Coaching. (Your instructor will provide you with information; see also the departmental website.)

Zielgruppe: Only students of Anglistik/Amerikanistik and LA Englisch WHO STARTED STUDYING BEFORE WiSe 2015/16 will be admitted to this course.

- to understand extended speech even when it is not clearly structured
- to understand extended speech when relationships are only implied and not signalled explicitly
- to understand and comment on academic presentations in English

Dr. Prickett's section is an online international learning scenario: We will be working with students from Beit Berl College, Israel. The course content differs slightly from the above descriptors.

Students are required to submit assignments on a regular basis. Independent study is an integral component of the course. Students are strongly encouraged to attend the Independent Pronunciation Coaching. (Your instructor will provide you with information; see also the departmental website.)

Zielgruppe

Studierende der Anglistik/Amerikanistik und des LA Englisch

Are you an exchange student (Erasmus or other program)?

Due to the limited number of spots in our courses, our department and the University of Potsdam's International Office ("Participation in language courses at Zessko (Center for Languages and Key Competences)") <http://www.uni-potsdam.de/en/international/incoming/students/exchange/partner.html> have developed the following guidelines for Erasmus students:

- Erasmus and other exchange students will not be automatically admitted to courses.
- limited course spots (2 in "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck I," 2 in "Übersetzen," and 1 in "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck II") will be reserved for Erasmus students whose major is English and/or American Studies.
- On a case by case basis, Erasmus students might be permitted to attend language courses at the Institut für Anglistik und Amerikanistik (Masters-level courses). Please contact the Institute directly.

Lerninhalte

This course helps students master oral communication of an informative, explanatory, and persuasive nature through presenting and debating. Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able

- to understand and identify the principles of these genres
- to structure and present an academic presentation in English effectively
- to present complex subjects; integrating sub-themes and developing particular points
- to formulate their ideas and opinions with precision and utilize appropriate language
- to relate their contributions skilfully to those of other speakers
- to round off with an appropriate conclusion
- to respond to audience questions with confidence

Students are required to participate in weekly class discussions. Independent study is an integral component of the course.

Students are strongly encouraged to attend the Conversational English Program and, if still necessary, the Independent Pronunciation Coaching. (Your instructor will provide you with information; see also the departmental website.)

Zielgruppe

Studierende der Anglistik/Amerikanistik und des LA Englisch

Are you an exchange student (Erasmus or other program)?

Due to the limited number of spots in our courses, our department and the University of Potsdam's International Office have developed the following guidelines for Erasmus students:

- Erasmus and other exchange students will not be automatically admitted to courses.
- limited course spots (2 in "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck I," 2 in "Übersetzen," and 1 in "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck II") will be reserved for Erasmus students whose major is English and/or American Studies.
- On a case by case basis, Erasmus students might be permitted to attend language courses at the Institut für Anglistik und Amerikanistik (Masters-level courses). Please contact the Institute directly.

Voraussetzung:

Erfolgreicher Abschluss des gesamten Basismoduls bzw. des Moduls Sprachpraxis 1 (= Schriftlicher Ausdruck I, Übersetzen, Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck I)

Leistungsnachweis:

Eine Abschlussklausur

Hinweis: Die Anzahl an LP (Leistungspunkten = 3) entspricht der Anzahl an ECTS-Punkten.

Note: The number of LP (Leistungspunkte = 3) equals the number of ECTS points.

Laut aktueller Modulbeschreibung ist die regelmäßige Anwesenheit obligatorisch. Die Anwesenheit in den sprachpraktischen Lehrveranstaltungen ist dringend erforderlich, weil andernfalls die Lernziele nicht erreicht werden können und eine Leistungserfassung im Sinne der Prüfungsordnung nicht möglich ist.

Lerninhalte:

This two-hour writing course centers on essay writing and the argumentative essay in particular. Upon completion of this course, students will be able

- to express themselves using nuanced language (improved accuracy and appropriacy of writing)
- to produce cohesive and coherent academic writing (improved complexity and effectiveness of writing)
- to identify and produce various types of academic texts
- to evaluate their own and others' texts (peer review)
- to assess and cite (MLA) appropriate sources properly

Students are required to submit assignments on a regular basis. Independent study is an integral component of the course.

Students are strongly encouraged to attend the English Academic Writing Tutorial. (Your instructor will provide you with information; see also the departmental website.)

Recent comparative studies refer to "film musicals" as an umbrella term for all kinds of cinematic musical traditions. Unlike earlier uses of the word denoting a specific Hollywood tradition and (mostly European) transformations, "film musicals" in the more recent sense also subsumes examples from the Middle East, Latin America and Asia, with a special spotlight on Indian cinema's long and vibrant musical traditions. Tracing these developments, this seminar will seek to identify criteria of a 'world cinema' of related musical forms, apt to bring out the complex networks of cross-cultural influence and indebtedness. In most general terms, there seems to be a specific tension in film musicals as they seem to have in common, on the one hand, a special aptness for dramatizing political events (such as the ecstatic bursting-into-song as a moment of interruption, or more generally, the celebration of community spirit in group dance routines) but, on the other, often crystallize into predictable forms making them opium for the people rather than politically inspiring. A canon of a world cinema of musicals should therefore focus on films that resist this ossifying tendency.

Far from being dismissed as mass entertainment, comic books have long advanced to mature forms that not only undermine any facile division into high and low culture, but also challenge conventional ways of storytelling. This course will provide a general introduction on how to read and understand comics – and especially, their more refined variants typically referred to as graphic novels, as they hover between fantasy and memory culture, and are situated between the modes of history writing, narrative fiction and life writing. A special focus will be given to transcultural negotiations in a world-literary space.

As symbols of modernity and progress, trains and rails have figured as the most "magnificent machine[s]" (Miner) in the cultural, emotional, and ideological landscapes of the American nation, capturing its ideals of growth and mobility, ingenuity and dynamism, and furthering visions of national, continental, and hemispheric unity and progress. Focusing on the intersectionality of the technologies of rails and race, the course "Railroads in American Literature" addresses the continuous impact of the railroad on the African American community, history, and literature. Beginning with the discourses of the "underground railroad," the course syllabus includes narratives by African American authors as well as theoretical texts that highlight the role of the railroad in African American lives. The goals of the course are: (1) to read the discursive history of technological segregation of Black Americans and the role played by the railroad in drawing racial lines; (2) to analyze the racialization of the railroad technologies; (3) to study the poetics and politics of the African American railroad discourses, and record disruptions of the mainstream narratives; (4) to study contacts and patterns of creolization that occur across racial and technological lines; (5) to investigate African American imaginaries of the "human" and the "machine" as well as question forms of technological justice and progress envisioned by a "Black ethos" (Baraka).

The course with all additional information will be available on Moodle from 28 April 2020. Further information will follow soon.

For a while, it seemed fashionable in academia to declare Marxist theory dead or obsolete. In effect, the critics making such pronouncements joined in the new-right triumphalism that considered the end of the so-called Cold War and the collapse of the various "actually existing socialisms" as heralding in the unrivalled dominance of capitalism. But more recently, in the aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis, the sell-out of social-democratic parties across the Global North, the neoliberal reduction of the state to a heavily-armed capital generator, the resurgence of openly right-wing politics, and the increasingly inescapable destruction of ecosystems in the name of profit and growth, the cant of the "end of history" rings as hollow as the hopelessly naïve diagnosis of our period as a "post-ideological" one. Those developments have made it abundantly clear that exploitation and class struggle are here to stay. In turn, this state of affairs urges a renewed engagement with the theory dedicated to analyzing capitalism, with the intention thereby to contribute to its termination.

In this seminar, we will explore a number of classic Marxist concepts, such as ideology, class struggle, base/superstructure, capital, and the perennially provocative notion of economic determination. We will also clarify terms like neoliberalism and the contemporary guise of imperialism. But since this is a literary-studies class, we will also want to see for ourselves how those concepts help in reading literature. That is why we will read Thomas Ligotti's My Work Is Not Yet Done. A connoisseur of the dark and disturbing, Ligotti is often hailed as one of the best living writers of horror fiction today. In that book, he focusses specifically on the horrors of employment — which should make for an interesting read in this seminar on Marxism.

Please be aware that this is a theory-heavy seminar. We will read a number of difficult non-literary texts in addition, discussions will often revolve around abstract concepts. Interpretations of the literary texts will likely take up less space in the class compared to interpretations of the theory. If that doesn't scare you, jump aboard: you will learn a lot.

This course aims at interrogating the 'new' medium of video games broadly along the lines of gender and postcolonial inquiry. It is designed to give an overview of approaches to digital gaming such as narratology vs. ludology, as well as its tropes. In a second step, we will apply these theories to different examples of that genre. Throughout the semester, you will create and refine research theses, which you will work into term papers. Among other things, you are required to briefly introduce one text or object for discussion in class and participate in various e-learning activities.

Upon completion of the course, you will be able to

- define and classify different approaches to digital gaming
- contrast, discuss, and criticize theoretical texts
- apply theory to different research objects
- formulate research theses and write research papers

Please note that this course accommodates a maximum of 30 students. In case registrations exceed this number, selection will take place on the basis of letters of motivation.

Given the circumstances created by Covid-19, this course is currently being restructured so as to make physical attendance ("Präsenzlehre") obsolete. Instead, it will require participation in weekly digital learning group meetings. Prospective participants need to be outfitted with the necessary devices such as webcams etc. and familiarize themselves with video conferencing tools.

Literatur

Among other things, we will discuss titles such a Bioshock: Infinite, Battlefield V, the Tomb Raider series, the Anno series and the Monkey Island series. Further suggestions including a short explanation of the relevant aspects are welcome.

Dear students, all courses will be taught as online courses with asynchronous access until further notice. Once you have signed on in PULS and have been admitted in PULS, your instructor will email you via PULS to let you know when and how to access the online material (moodle, etc.). Testatsleistungen (course requirements) may be subject to change. Students who cannot (yet) access PULS: Please email your instructor directly. It is possible that classes can be switched to classroom teaching (Präsenzlehre) at some point during the semester. If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled.

The urban space is one of the most persistent and prominent motifs in African American Literature; Amiri Baraka even asserts that African American writing is at its core urban. The city therefore represents a productive vantage point on African American history as well as on the changes of literary production. In this course we will trace the representations of the city in texts from the slave narrative to contemporary African American artists and critics. We will explore the changing perspectives and images of the city from a "Promised Land" to "A Dream Deferred," which were created within these spaces, as well as about them, and try to understand the differences to the respective white American literary representations.

The long-drawn process that led to the 2016 Brexit referendum and from there to the actual secession of the UK from the EU has not only revealed the faultlines and fissures in Britain's deeply polarized society; it has also put on the agenda the question as to what kind of country Britain is, and what kind of Britain people wish to live in. Brexit, in other words, is symptomatic of a society struggling to redefine itself, its 'identity', its place in the world, in history, and in the future. These, of course, are questions that literature as a specific domain of meaning-making has always engaged with, and it should not come as a surprise that the Brexit process has provoked numerous British writers to respond to the crisis in multiple ways -- from the social realism of the 'condition of England' novel to scathing grotesque satires; from dystopian visions of a völkisch post-Brexit Britain to the reflexive, pensive or angry monologues of the 'Brexit Shorts' drama series launched by The Guardian; from poetic allegories to mock-documentary collages.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a number of representative Brexit novels, plays and poems/song lyrics, some of them snappy and catchy, others lengthy and laborious. We will frame or readings not only with the contextual specifics of the conditions that these texts respond to but also with more principal questions about the relations between literature and socio-historical and political processes.

N.B.: This is a seminar with extensive reading requirements!

Every technological innovation is branded as the radically new, as the next big thing. But with these framings come historical ruptures, every media technology considered as "new" breaks with the historical lineages that once produced previous new media, now old. This rupture, media theorists have claimed, influences cultural memory as well as the cultural perception of temporality, place, futurity. In the seminar we will recover forgotten histories of then-new-media to discuss continuities and ruptures in the cultural imagination of computation.

Please note that this course will be taught in an intensive mode in the months of April and May, with no classes after 31 May. Students should be aware of the higher work load in these months. More information will be made available by the lecturer upon enrolment.

In this class we will trace the developments of Chicana writing as a crucial part of the Chicano/a Movement. In its broadest sense the term designates texts produced in the United States by Mexican-American female authors. As part of the biggest minority group in the United States Chicana authors did not only have to find and articulate their own voice as racial Other but at the same time as women within a patriarchally defined community. To understand this position "in-between" a male dominated Civil Rights Movement and the white dominated feminist movement we will read poems, novels, and short stories of authors such as Gloria Anzaldúa, Ana Castillo, Helena María Viramontes, Sandra Cisneros, and Cherry Moraga. The texts will be further placed in the context of autobiographical writing and gender theory to understand the importance of the literary expressions for the Chicana feminist movement and the struggle to formulate the subject position of "the" Chicana.

Recent comparative studies refer to "film musicals" as an umbrella term for all kinds of cinematic musical traditions. Unlike earlier uses of the word denoting a specific Hollywood tradition and (mostly European) transformations, "film musicals" in the more recent sense also subsumes examples from the Middle East, Latin America and Asia, with a special spotlight on Indian cinema's long and vibrant musical traditions. Tracing these developments, this seminar will seek to identify criteria of a 'world cinema' of related musical forms, apt to bring out the complex networks of cross-cultural influence and indebtedness. In most general terms, there seems to be a specific tension in film musicals as they seem to have in common, on the one hand, a special aptness for dramatizing political events (such as the ecstatic bursting-into-song as a moment of interruption, or more generally, the celebration of community spirit in group dance routines) but, on the other, often crystallize into predictable forms making them opium for the people rather than politically inspiring. A canon of a world cinema of musicals should therefore focus on films that resist this ossifying tendency.

Far from being dismissed as mass entertainment, comic books have long advanced to mature forms that not only undermine any facile division into high and low culture, but also challenge conventional ways of storytelling. This course will provide a general introduction on how to read and understand comics – and especially, their more refined variants typically referred to as graphic novels, as they hover between fantasy and memory culture, and are situated between the modes of history writing, narrative fiction and life writing. A special focus will be given to transcultural negotiations in a world-literary space.

This seminar traces the archetyp of the femme fatale across literature and visual art forms from different cultural contexts and historical epochs. It seeks to explore the ways in which fatal femininity has been imagined and how the femme fatale simultaneously reinforces and challenges cultural stereotypes.

The last decades have seen an upsurge of autobiographical writing as well as of multimedia self-presentations by disabled persons. This seminar focuses on female British authors' verbal, graphic and digital autobiographies which depict life stories shaped by physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities. "Disability" will be introduced as a fluid, intersectional identity category (a category intersecting with gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity/race) that challenges the binary opposition between "disabled" and "non-disabled", "normal" or "able-bodied". The seminar deals with the broader subject of disability as a new category in cultural and literary studies as well as with disability autobiography as a multimedia genre. We will analyse verbal, graphic and digital forms of autobiographies by investigating their narrative structures and by exploring them as creative responses to the ableist, mentalist, sexist, racist and heteronormative representations of women with physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities in medical discourse and the media. Furthermore, we discuss if (and how) the self-presentations in different media produce and perform unexpected, novel, controversial and strongly interactive images of bio- and neurodiversity.

Dear students, all courses will be taught as online courses with asynchronous access until further notice. Once you have signed on in PULS and have been admitted in PULS, your instructor will email you via PULS to let you know when and how to access the online material (moodle, etc.). Testatleistungen (course requirements) may be subject to change. Students who cannot (yet) access PULS: Please email your instructor directly. It is possible that classes can be switched to classroom teaching (Präsenzlehre) at some point during the semester. If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled.

For a while, it seemed fashionable in academia to declare Marxist theory dead or obsolete. In effect, the critics making such pronouncements joined in the new-right triumphalism that considered the end of the so-called Cold War and the collapse of the various "actually existing socialisms" as heralding in the unrivalled dominance of capitalism. But more recently, in the aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis, the sell-out of social-democratic parties across the Global North, the neoliberal reduction of the state to a heavily-armed capital generator, the resurgence of openly right-wing politics, and the increasingly inescapable destruction of ecosystems in the name of profit and growth, the cant of the "end of history" rings as hollow as the hopelessly naïve diagnosis of our period as a "post-ideological" one. Those developments have made it abundantly clear that exploitation and class struggle are here to stay. In turn, this state of affairs urges a renewed engagement with the theory dedicated to analyzing capitalism, with the intention thereby to contribute to its termination.

In this seminar, we will explore a number of classic Marxist concepts, such as ideology, class struggle, base/superstructure, capital, and the perennially provocative notion of economic determination. We will also clarify terms like neoliberalism and the contemporary guise of imperialism. But since this is a literary-studies class, we will also want to see for ourselves how those concepts help in reading literature. That is why we will read Thomas Ligotti's My Work Is Not Yet Done. A connoisseur of the dark and disturbing, Ligotti is often hailed as one of the best living writers of horror fiction today. In that book, he focusses specifically on the horrors of employment — which should make for an interesting read in this seminar on Marxism.

Please be aware that this is a theory-heavy seminar. We will read a number of difficult non-literary texts in addition, discussions will often revolve around abstract concepts. Interpretations of the literary texts will likely take up less space in the class compared to interpretations of the theory. If that doesn't scare you, jump aboard: you will learn a lot.

The literature of transgression, deception, despair, and terrors both real and imaginary has proved to be as persistent as its subject-matters. Fomenting around the mid-1700s, Gothic literature has been a cultural mainstay ever since. Whether derided as a subliterary recycling of the same trite formulas over and over or praised for exemplifying the powers of the imagination, whether lambasted for its conservative ideologies or subjected to censorship for its radical ones, the Gothic has kindled responses as contradictory as itself.

In this class, we go back to some of the classics of Gothic fiction from the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries: Ann Radcliffe's The Mysteries of Udolpho, Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey, and Mary Shelley's Frankenstein. In these novels, Gothic literature has arguably reached an early peak. Simultaneously, though, each of these works embodies tensions and contradictions of content and form that point to the complexity of the Gothic. We will discuss these complications via topics ranging from the sublime and the Gothic castle to fear, the Gothic heroine, masculinity, and monstrosity. Attempts will be made both to situate the texts in some of the reigning ideologies of their day and to address aspects that have proved influential far beyond the original contexts of the work in question.

Secondary literature will be provided via Moodle.

I strongly suggest starting to read The Mysteries of Udolpho before the first session (as soon as possible, in fact). The novel is long, complex, and written in a style and vocabulary that might take some getting used to. This will also be the first of the novels we discuss.

In this course we will be investigating how different cultural forms can suggest new ways for thinking about climate change and even afford opportunities for imagining more just and resilient futures. That is, we will consider the question: how and why do cultural productions matter in the context of climate change? Our course will engage with a variety of material, ranging from short stories and novels to podcasts and film and situate them within broader debates and discourses—scientific, historical, and political—about climate change.

The long-drawn process that led to the 2016 Brexit referendum and from there to the actual secession of the UK from the EU has not only revealed the faultlines and fissures in Britain's deeply polarized society; it has also put on the agenda the question as to what kind of country Britain is, and what kind of Britain people wish to live in. Brexit, in other words, is symptomatic of a society struggling to redefine itself, its 'identity', its place in the world, in history, and in the future. These, of course, are questions that literature as a specific domain of meaning-making has always engaged with, and it should not come as a surprise that the Brexit process has provoked numerous British writers to respond to the crisis in multiple ways -- from the social realism of the 'condition of England' novel to scathing grotesque satires; from dystopian visions of a völkisch post-Brexit Britain to the reflexive, pensive or angry monologues of the 'Brexit Shorts' drama series launched by The Guardian ; from poetic allegories to mock-documentary collages.
In our seminar we will read and discuss a number of representative Brexit novels, plays and poems/song lyrics, some of them snappy and catchy, others lengthy and laborious. We will frame or readings not only with the contextual specifics of the conditions that these texts respond to but also with more principal questions about the relations between literature and socio-historical and political processes.

Recent comparative studies refer to "film musicals" as an umbrella term for all kinds of cinematic musical traditions. Unlike earlier uses of the word denoting a specific Hollywood tradition and (mostly European) transformations, "film musicals" in the more recent sense also subsumes examples from the Middle East, Latin America and Asia, with a special spotlight on Indian cinema's long and vibrant musical traditions. Tracing these developments, this seminar will seek to identify criteria of a 'world cinema' of related musical forms, apt to bring out the complex networks of cross-cultural influence and indebtedness. In most general terms, there seems to be a specific tension in film musicals as they seem to have in common, on the one hand, a special aptness for dramatizing political events (such as the ecstatic bursting-into-song as a moment of interruption, or more generally, the celebration of community spirit in group dance routines) but, on the other, often crystallize into predictable forms making them opium for the people rather than politically inspiring. A canon of a world cinema of musicals should therefore focus on films that resist this ossifying tendency.

Far from being dismissed as mass entertainment, comic books have long advanced to mature forms that not only undermine any facile division into high and low culture, but also challenge conventional ways of storytelling. This course will provide a general introduction on how to read and understand comics – and especially, their more refined variants typically referred to as graphic novels, as they hover between fantasy and memory culture, and are situated between the modes of history writing, narrative fiction and life writing. A special focus will be given to transcultural negotiations in a world-literary space.

This seminar traces the archetyp of the femme fatale across literature and visual art forms from different cultural contexts and historical epochs. It seeks to explore the ways in which fatal femininity has been imagined and how the femme fatale simultaneously reinforces and challenges cultural stereotypes.

The literature of transgression, deception, despair, and terrors both real and imaginary has proved to be as persistent as its subject-matters. Fomenting around the mid-1700s, Gothic literature has been a cultural mainstay ever since. Whether derided as a subliterary recycling of the same trite formulas over and over or praised for exemplifying the powers of the imagination, whether lambasted for its conservative ideologies or subjected to censorship for its radical ones, the Gothic has kindled responses as contradictory as itself.

In this class, we go back to some of the classics of Gothic fiction from the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries: Ann Radcliffe's The Mysteries of Udolpho, Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey, and Mary Shelley's Frankenstein. In these novels, Gothic literature has arguably reached an early peak. Simultaneously, though, each of these works embodies tensions and contradictions of content and form that point to the complexity of the Gothic. We will discuss these complications via topics ranging from the sublime and the Gothic castle to fear, the Gothic heroine, masculinity, and monstrosity. Attempts will be made both to situate the texts in some of the reigning ideologies of their day and to address aspects that have proved influential far beyond the original contexts of the work in question.

Radcliffe, Ann. The Mysteries of Udolpho (Oxford World's Classics). Ed. Bonamy Dobré. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2008 [or previous prints by Oxford]. ISBN: 978-0199537419
Austen, Jane. Northanger Abbey (Norton Critical Edition). Ed. Susan Fraiman. New York and London: W.W. Norton, 2004. ISBN: 978-0393978506
Shelley, Mary. Frankenstein (Second Norton Critical Edition). Ed. J. Paul Hunter. New York and London: W.W. Norton, 2012. ISBN: 978-0393927931

Secondary literature will be provided via Moodle.

I strongly suggest starting to read The Mysteries of Udolpho before the first session (as soon as possible, in fact). The novel is long, complex, and written in a style and vocabulary that might take some getting used to. This will also be the first of the novels we discuss.

Dear students, all courses will be taught as online courses with asynchronous access until further notice. Once you have signed on in PULS and have been admitted in PULS, your instructor will email you via PULS to let you know when and how to access the online material (moodle, etc.). Testatsleistungen (course requirements) may be subject to change. Students who cannot (yet) access PULS: Please email your instructor directly. It is possible that classes can be switched to classroom teaching (Präsenzlehre) at some point during the semester. If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled.

In this class, we will study literature (and, maybe, film) which attempts to narrate illegalised migration to the UK. This includes stories from the first three volumes of Refugee Tales and at least two novels. Critical theory will guide our readings.

Please buy:
 Benjamin Zephaniah, Refugee Boy
 Abdulrazak Gurnah, By the Sea
 Additional material and short stories will be provided online via Moodle.

In this course we will be investigating how different cultural forms can suggest new ways for thinking about climate change and even afford opportunities for imagining more just and resilient futures. That is, we will consider the question: how and why do cultural productions matter in the context of climate change? Our course will engage with a variety of material, ranging from short stories and novels to podcasts and film and situate them within broader debates and discourses—scientific, historical, and political—about climate change.

The past is everywhere. This 'memory boom' (Huyssen) ranges from the restoration of old urban centres, the boom in retro fashions, the popular obsession with 'self-musealisation' on Instagram or through autobiography, and the centrality of historical documentaries on television to the increasing number of controversies about divisive historical events and their commemoration. The seminar examines this development by exploring the different ways in which individuals and societies (re)construct and represent the past. Students will discuss foundational readings that have become central to the discussion of memory. These will be employed to engage with a wide range of cultural forms that address the themes of memory and forgetting. Topics include: the (contested) link between memory and nationhood, the function of so-called 'sites of memory', the notion of heritage, the individual and collective nature of trauma and mourning, embodied practices of memory such as testimony and witnessing.

This course aims at interrogating the 'new' medium of video games broadly along the lines of gender and postcolonial inquiry. It is designed to give an overview of approaches to digital gaming such as narratology vs. ludology, as well as its tropes. In a second step, we will apply these theories to different examples of that genre. Throughout the semester, you will create and refine research theses, which you will work into term papers. Among other things, you are required to briefly introduce one text or object for discussion in class and participate in various e-learning activities.

Upon completion of the course, you will be able to

- define and classify different approaches to digital gaming
- contrast, discuss, and criticize theoretical texts
- apply theory to different research objects
- formulate research theses and write research papers

Please note that this course accommodates a maximum of 30 students. In case registrations exceed this number, selection will take place on the basis of letters of motivation.

Given the circumstances created by Covid-19, this course is currently being restructured so as to make physical attendance ("Präsenzlehre") obsolete. Instead, it will require participation in weekly digital learning group meetings. Prospective participants need to be outfitted with the necessary devices such as webcams etc. and familiarize themselves with video conferencing tools.

Literatur

Among other things, we will discuss titles such a Bioshock: Infinite, Battlefield V, the Tomb Raider series, the Anno series and the Monkey Island series. Further suggestions including a short explanation of the relevant aspects are welcome.

This course aims to promote an understanding of the complexity of Australian national identity by providing a historical background to contemporary debates. Based on the study of primary texts – including government documents, novels, poems, films, historiographical works, newspaper articles, song lyrics, and tourism advertisements – we will scrutinize the tradition of defining Australia. Placing a particular emphasis on historical focal points (e.g., Gallipoli, the British departure from the South Pacific, the introduction of official multiculturalism, the 'History Wars'), but also discussing recent events such as the 2019–2020 bushfire season, we will focus especially on recurring themes such as the outback/bush, whiteness, mateship, and egalitarianism that have functioned as (auto) stereotypes of Australianness. In addition, we will bring to light the ambivalent attitude Australian settlers have adopted towards Australia's former motherland, Great Britain, its neighbouring Asian countries, and its powerful ally to the east, the United States. Perhaps most importantly, we will discuss how Australians have dealt with the legacy of colonial violence and oppression towards Australia's Indigenous population and attempt to explain Indigenous-settler relations, mechanisms of otherness, and dominant representations of Aboriginality in contemporary Australian culture. In this endeavor, cultural studies will serve as our core analytical framework; we will draw, in particular, on secondary literature that developed out of the context of the Australian tradition of cultural studies.

Students can opt to write a Modulararbeit. International exchange students are welcome to participate.

Recent comparative studies refer to "film musicals" as an umbrella term for all kinds of cinematic musical traditions. Unlike earlier uses of the word denoting a specific Hollywood tradition and (mostly European) transformations, "film musicals" in the more recent sense also subsumes examples from the Middle East, Latin America and Asia, with a special spotlight on Indian cinema's long and vibrant musical traditions. Tracing these developments, this seminar will seek to identify criteria of a 'world cinema' of related musical forms, apt to bring out the complex networks of cross-cultural influence and indebtedness. In most general terms, there seems to be a specific tension in film musicals as they seem to have in common, on the one hand, a special aptness for dramatizing political events (such as the ecstatic bursting-into-song as a moment of interruption, or more generally, the celebration of community spirit in group dance routines) but, on the other, often crystallize into predictable forms making them opium for the people rather than politically inspiring. A canon of a world cinema of musicals should therefore focus on films that resist this ossifying tendency.

Far from being dismissed as mass entertainment, comic books have long advanced to mature forms that not only undermine any facile division into high and low culture, but also challenge conventional ways of storytelling. This course will provide a general introduction on how to read and understand comics – and especially, their more refined variants typically referred to as graphic novels, as they hover between fantasy and memory culture, and are situated between the modes of history writing, narrative fiction and life writing. A special focus will be given to transcultural negotiations in a world-literary space.

For a while, it seemed fashionable in academia to declare Marxist theory dead or obsolete. In effect, the critics making such pronouncements joined in the new-right triumphalism that considered the end of the so-called Cold War and the collapse of the various "actually existing socialisms" as heralding in the unrivalled dominance of capitalism. But more recently, in the aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis, the sell-out of social-democratic parties across the Global North, the neoliberal reduction of the state to a heavily-armed capital generator, the resurgence of openly right-wing politics, and the increasingly inescapable destruction of ecosystems in the name of profit and growth, the cant of the "end of history" rings as hollow as the hopelessly naïve diagnosis of our period as a "post-ideological" one. Those developments have made it abundantly clear that exploitation and class struggle are here to stay. In turn, this state of affairs urges a renewed engagement with the theory dedicated to analyzing capitalism, with the intention thereby to contribute to its termination.

In this seminar, we will explore a number of classic Marxist concepts, such as ideology, class struggle, base/superstructure, capital, and the perennially provocative notion of economic determination. We will also clarify terms like neoliberalism and the contemporary guise of imperialism. But since this is a literary-studies class, we will also want to see for ourselves how those concepts help in reading literature. That is why we will read Thomas Ligotti's My Work Is Not Yet Done. A connoisseur of the dark and disturbing, Ligotti is often hailed as one of the best living writers of horror fiction today. In that book, he focusses specifically on the horrors of employment — which should make for an interesting read in this seminar on Marxism.

Please be aware that this is a theory-heavy seminar. We will read a number of difficult non-literary texts in addition, discussions will often revolve around abstract concepts. Interpretations of the literary texts will likely take up less space in the class compared to interpretations of the theory. If that doesn't scare you, jump aboard: you will learn a lot.

Dear students, all courses will be taught as online courses with asynchronous access until further notice. Once you have signed on in PULS and have been admitted in PULS, your instructor will email you via PULS to let you know when and how to access the online material (moodle, etc.). Testatleistungen (course requirements) may be subject to change. Students who cannot (yet) access PULS: Please email your instructor directly. It is possible that classes can be switched to classroom teaching (Präsenzlehre) at some point during the semester. If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled. Thanks to colonialism and tourism, for centuries the Caribbean has generated intense discursive attention on the part of Europeans and North Americans. But what about Caribbeans' own views of the region? In fact, the latter has proved an immensely fertile ground for anti- and postcolonial thought of all kinds. Trenchant indictments of colonialism and important theories of racialization no less than the first trans-Atlantic studies and influential theories of the mixing of cultures have all originated in the twentieth-century Caribbean. Caribbean thinkers have thereby generated their own ideas about this complex and eminently unique region.

In this class, we will read and discuss essays of various tones and moods, from the lyrical to the analytical. Readings will mostly come from the Anglophone and Francophone Caribbean (all texts will be read in English). Topics include creolization, tourism, the struggle with colonial legacies, views of tropical nature, race, and attitudes towards Caribbean literature the thinkers we will meet include Sylvia Wynter, Édouard Glissant, Antonio Benítez-Rojo, Jamaica Kincaid, Suzanne Césaire, Derek Walcott, Michel-Rolph Trouillot, and Frantz Fanon. Attempts will be made to provide for both those beginning their study of the Caribbean and those who have already gained extensive knowledge of the region.

In this course we will be investigating how different cultural forms can suggest new ways for thinking about climate change and even afford opportunities for imagining more just and resilient futures. That is, we will consider the question: how and why do cultural productions matter in the context of climate change? Our course will engage with a variety of material, ranging from short stories and novels to podcasts and film and situate them within broader debates and discourses—scientific, historical, and political—about climate change.

The past is everywhere. This 'memory boom' (Huyssen) ranges from the restoration of old urban centres, the boom in retro fashions, the popular obsession with 'self-musealisation' on Instagram or through autobiography, and the centrality of historical documentaries on television to the increasing number of controversies about divisive historical events and their commemoration.

The seminar examines this development by exploring the different ways in which individuals and societies (re)construct and represent the past. Students will discuss foundational readings that have become central to the discussion of memory. These will be employed to engage with a wide range of cultural forms that address the themes of memory and forgetting. Topics include: the (contested) link between memory and nationhood, the function of so-called 'sites of memory', the notion of heritage, the individual and collective nature of trauma and mourning, embodied practices of memory such as testimony and witnessing.

This course aims at interrogating the 'new' medium of video games broadly along the lines of gender and postcolonial inquiry. It is designed to give an overview of approaches to digital gaming such as narratology vs. ludology, as well as its tropes. In a second step, we will apply these theories to different examples of that genre. Throughout the semester, you will create and refine research theses, which you will work into term papers. Among other things, you are required to briefly introduce one text or object for discussion in class and participate in various e-learning activities.

Upon completion of the course, you will be able to

- define and classify different approaches to digital gaming
- contrast, discuss, and criticize theoretical texts
- apply theory to different research objects
- formulate research theses and write research papers

Please note that this course accommodates a maximum of 30 students. In case registrations exceed this number, selection will take place on the basis of letters of motivation.

Given the circumstances created by Covid-19, this course is currently being restructured so as to make physical attendance ("Präsenzlehre") obsolete. Instead, it will require participation in weekly digital learning group meetings. Prospective participants need to be outfitted with the necessary devices such as webcams etc. and familiarize themselves with video conferencing tools.

Literatur

Among other things, we will discuss titles such a Bioshock: Infinite, Battlefield V, the Tomb Raider series, the Anno series and the Monkey Island series. Further suggestions including a short explanation of the relevant aspects are welcome.

The long-drawn process that led to the 2016 Brexit referendum and from there to the actual secession of the UK from the EU has not only revealed the faultlines and fissures in Britain's deeply polarized society; it has also put on the agenda the question as to what kind of country Britain is, and what kind of Britain people wish to live in. Brexit, in other words, is symptomatic of a society struggling to redefine itself, its 'identity', its place in the world, in history, and in the future. These, of course, are questions that literature as a specific domain of meaning-making has always engaged with, and it should not come as a surprise that the Brexit process has provoked numerous British writers to respond to the crisis in multiple ways -- from the social realism of the 'condition of England' novel to scathing grotesque satires; from dystopian visions of a völkisch post-Brexit Britain to the reflexive, pensive or angry monologues of the 'Brexit Shorts' drama series launched by The Guardian; from poetic allegories to mock-documentary collages.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a number of representative Brexit novels, plays and poems/song lyrics, some of them snappy and catchy, others lengthy and laborious. We will frame or readings not only with the contextual specifics of the conditions that these texts respond to but also with more principal questions about the relations between literature and socio-historical and political processes.

N.B.: This is a seminar with extensive reading requirements!

Every technological innovation is branded as the radically new, as the next big thing. But with these framings come historical ruptures, every media technology considered as "new" breaks with the historical lineages that once produced previous new media, now old. This rupture, media theorists have claimed, influences cultural memory as well as the cultural perception of temporality, place, futurity. In the seminar we will recover forgotten histories of then-new-media to discuss continuities and ruptures in the cultural imagination of computation.

The Guinness Book of World Records cites Sherlock Holmes as the most portrayed literary character in film and television. This seminar will trace the shifting meanings of Sherlock through several media, including popular and fandom creations. It looks towards figures of detection, hermeneutics, and current theories of adaptation to query notions of authority and originality, and to contextualise, analyse and interpret an array of Sherlock figures.

This seminar will remain in online mode regardless of changes to official policy. This is to provide for those students who, for various reasons – exchange semesters, (urgent) care responsibilities, volunteer work, or otherwise – might not be able to attend seminars in Potsdam prior to the summer break. The course will involve some short, recorded lectures, but will mostly entail reading activities and sharing notes and ideas to facilitate a collaborative atmosphere of learning. The class will be asynchronous (you do not have to do the work at the specific time scheduled for this class). There will be options of submitting a longer term paper for those students who require 6 or more credit points. Students should obtain access to Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes short stories. These are out of copyright and should be freely available online, available second hand, or support your local book store by ordering an actual book, for instance, the Penguin complete Sherlock Holmes (ISBN: 9780141040288).

In this course, we'll work to develop racial literacy and question discourses of race in and beyond Europe. We will consider how race is constructed, and used in the production of racism. We'll read short literary texts to investigate their racializing practices, as well as an array of critical interventions. We'll aim to better understand processes of colonial racialization, as well as questions of whiteness and the development of narratives of racelessness. In particular, we'll also consider how these issues relate to contemporary notions of Europeaness.

This course aims to promote an understanding of the complexity of Australian national identity by providing a historical background to contemporary debates. Based on the study of primary texts – including government documents, novels, poems, films, historiographical works, newspaper articles, song lyrics, and tourism advertisements – we will scrutinize the tradition of defining Australia. Placing a particular emphasis on historical focal points (e.g., Gallipoli, the British departure from the South Pacific, the introduction of official multiculturalism, the 'History Wars'), but also discussing recent events such as the 2019–2020 bushfire season, we will focus especially on recurring themes such as the outback/bush, whiteness, mateship, and egalitarianism that have functioned as (auto) stereotypes of Australianness. In addition, we will bring to light the ambivalent attitude Australian settlers have adopted towards Australia's former motherland, Great Britain, its neighbouring Asian countries, and its powerful ally to the east, the United States. Perhaps most importantly, we will discuss how Australians have dealt with the legacy of colonial violence and oppression towards Australia's Indigenous population and attempt to explain Indigenous–settler relations, mechanisms of otherness, and dominant representations of Aboriginality in contemporary Australian culture. In this endeavor, cultural studies will serve as our core analytical framework; we will draw, in particular, on secondary literature that developed out of the context of the Australian tradition of cultural studies.

Students can opt to write a Modulararbeit. International exchange students are welcome to participate.

Dear students, all courses will be taught as online courses with asynchronous access until further notice. Once you have signed on in PULS and have been admitted in PULS, your instructor will email you via PULS to let you know when and how to access the online material (moodle, etc.). Testatleistungen (course requirements) may be subject to change. Students who cannot (yet) access PULS: Please email your instructor directly. It is possible that classes can be switched to classroom teaching (Präsenzlehre) at some point during the semester. If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled.

Please follow the "comment" link above for more information on comments, course readings, course requirements and grading.

This is the first part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in linguistics. It aims to introduce students to the nature of language and the major domains of linguistic inquiry as well as its basic concepts, principles and tools in the following areas: Phonetics, Phonology, Morphology and Lexical Semantics. They will - excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions, - test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions, - clarify questions in class, and - complete assignments in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies. Please note that this course is offered by different instructors on different time slots every week. We also offer it in 2 different formats: 1) instructor-guided tuition (groups 3+4) with obligatory reading before class on the basis of guiding questions so that the session content can be collected interactively in class vs. 2) inverted-classroom format (groups 1+2) with the session content available as online material before the session, so that more of the in-class time can be used to settle questions. Both formats offer plenty of exercises before and in class. You may choose from these what suits you best in terms of both time slots and formats. There will be quizzes and a mock exam. Students are encouraged to acquire a copy of the textbook (see below) before the beginning of the semester. Tutorials (which provide you with further practice) will be announced at the beginning of the semester. It is strongly recommended that students attend one of these tutorials regularly. We strongly recommend attending this course in parallel with part II. Please register for this course in moodle for access to the course materials. The official registration is required via PULS.

This is the second part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in linguistics. In this course, students will learn about aspects of syntax, i.e. how phrases, clauses, and sentences are formed. They - excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions, - test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions, - clarify questions in class, and - complete assignments, which also include an application task, for each subtopic in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies. The course offers an introduction to the history of the English language from its origins to the present day. It explores the linguistic roots of English, the changes in pronunciation and loss of inflections, as well as the enormous expansion in vocabulary which characterizes the development of English. We will also consider the different varieties of English in evidence today and the similarities and dissimilarities between English and other Germanic languages. Among the difficulties encountered by ESL/EFL students are the English system of tenses as well as the discrepancy between spelling and pronunciation: these will all be dealt with in this series of lectures.

Please note that certain prerequisites (stated below) need to be fulfilled to take this course!

Note further: Due to the federal government's and the university administration's measures against the Corona/COVID-19 pandemic, this course will take place online in a predominantly asynchronous format. Coursework will therefore largely have to be done independently and in written form. Please understand that, in order to still ensure the provision of at least a minimally sufficient amount of mentoring, feedback and supervision, only a limited number of participants can be admitted.

Grammar books and dictionaries describe the inventory of words and syntactic patterns that exist at a certain point in time in a given language. However, languages inevitably change over time, and so earlier descriptions may become obsolete. The important point to realize about language change is that it is observable both over the course of hundreds of years but also as it is happening in Present-Day English (PDE). This course focuses on recent and currently ongoing changes of grammatical patterns observable in the everyday language use of native speakers of English. We will examine the development of a range of lexico-syntactic patterns in Present-Day English and discuss the possible motivations underlying these ongoing changes as well as their implications for language learning and teaching.

Voraussetzung

This course requires that participants have regular, independent access to a personal computer with an internet connection and some basic technical skills.

It also requires basic knowledge concerning mechanisms and factors governing language change as well as a sound command of basic linguistic terms and concepts. Specifically, this course will build on contents taught in Introduction to Synchronic Linguistics Pt. 1 & 2 (BMLin) as well as the lecture An Introduction to the History of English (ALin1).

Have you ever wondered why interaction is as unproblematic as it is? Why, for instance, do we manage to take turns in conversation without constantly interrupting each other? How do we know what our co-participants are trying to achieve with their utterances, and how do we accomplish larger projects? Why do we generally understand each other – and how do we deal with misunderstandings, slips of the tongue, or excessive background noise? Which role does language play to accomplish all of this, and which other means are available to interactants to make themselves understandable to each other? These questions have been investigated by conversation analysts for about fifty years, and generally, we now understand the mechanisms underlying everyday conversation quite well. However, from the very beginning, CA literature has pointed out that forms of institutional and workplace interaction, such as classroom talk, systematically differ from conversation in terms of these mechanisms – to a greater or lesser degree – and that it may be these differences that help us recognize that participants are engaging in, for instance, courtroom interaction, broadcast interviews, teacher-student interaction or police interrogations. This class will serve as an introduction to basic assumptions, methods and findings of Conversation Analysis (CA). We will discuss general principles of turn-taking, sequence organization and repair in conversation and, on that basis, identify constitutive features of classroom talk, news interviews and other types of institutional interaction.

This course is meant as an introduction to the Old English language spoken 1000 years ago by the Anglo-Saxon inhabitants of Britain and which is the origin of what is known as Modern English. Special attention will be paid to grammatical and phonological peculiarities of that language. Students will have to acquire a minimal basic vocabulary of Old English and the appropriate techniques of translating Old English texts. The seminar aims (1) at a better understanding of the Modern English language via knowledge of its historical shape (2) at enabling students to read and translate simple Anglo-Saxon texts with the help of a dictionary.

Sociolinguistics deals with the social life of language, i.e., language in its sociocultural context. It is an interdisciplinary branch of linguistics that looks at how our words and sentences are influenced by the society around us, for instance, how the accent or the dialect we use has been shaped by where we come from or which social status group we belong to. In this introductory course we will examine the role of language in a variety of social contexts, for example, in formal vs. casual situations, in multilingual settings, in situations requiring verbal politeness as well as in the construction of social identities. We will explore sociolinguistic theories and methods and we will cover the field's foundations, advances and current debates.

This course will explore the representation of some key events in English history based on original documents of the medieval and Tudor periods. The main concern will be linguistic analyses of these texts and their relevance for the history of English, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the 16th century. We will also consider the historical context: how events were represented but also, in some instances, misrepresented. As we shall see, false news is not an invention of the modern era. The course is intended for students of language as well as those with an interest in English history. It is recommended that participants are attending the lecture series An Introduction to the History of English, or have attended in a previous semester.

Dear students, all courses will be taught as online courses with asynchronous access until further notice. Once you have signed on in PULS and have been admitted in PULS, your instructor will email you via PULS to let you know when and how to access the online material (moodle, etc.). Testatsleistungen (course requirements) may be subject to change. Students who cannot (yet) access PULS: Please email your instructor directly. It is possible that classes can be switched to classroom teaching (Präsenzlehre) at some point during the semester. If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled.

This course is meant as an introduction to the Old English language spoken 1000 years ago by the Anglo-Saxon inhabitants of Britain and which is the origin of what is known as Modern English. Special attention will be paid to grammatical and phonological peculiarities of that language. Students will have to acquire a minimal basic vocabulary of Old English and the appropriate techniques of translating Old English texts. The seminar aims (1) at a better understanding of the Modern English language via knowledge of its historical shape (2) at enabling students to read and translate simple Anglo-Saxon texts with the help of a dictionary.

Sociolinguistics deals with the social life of language, i.e., language in its sociocultural context. It is an interdisciplinary branch of linguistics that looks at how our words and sentences are influenced by the society around us, for instance, how the accent or the dialect we use has been shaped by where we come from or which social status group we belong to. In this introductory course we will examine the role of language in a variety of social contexts, for example, in formal vs. casual situations, in multilingual settings, in situations requiring verbal politeness as well as in the construction of social identities. We will explore sociolinguistic theories and methods and we will cover the field's foundations, advances and current debates.

Please note that certain prerequisites (stated below) need to be fulfilled to take this course!

Note further: Due to the federal government's and the university administration's measures against the Corona/COVID-19 pandemic, this course will take place online in a predominantly asynchronous format. Coursework will therefore largely have to be done independently and in written form. Please understand that, in order to still ensure the provision of at least a minimally sufficient amount of mentoring, feedback and supervision, only a limited number of participants can be admitted.

Grammar books and dictionaries describe the inventory of words and syntactic patterns that exist at a certain point in time in a given language. However, languages inevitably change over time, and so earlier descriptions may become obsolete. The important point to realize about language change is that it is observable both over the course of hundreds of years but also as it is happening in Present-Day English (PDE). This course focuses on recent and currently ongoing changes of grammatical patterns observable in the everyday language use of native speakers of English. We will examine the development of a range of lexico-syntactic patterns in Present-Day English and discuss the possible motivations underlying these ongoing changes as well as their implications for language learning and teaching.

Voraussetzung

This course requires that participants have regular, independent access to a personal computer with an internet connection and some basic technical skills.

It also requires basic knowledge concerning mechanisms and factors governing language change as well as a sound command of basic linguistic terms and concepts. Specifically, this course will build on contents taught in Introduction to Synchronic Linguistics Pt. 1 & 2 (BMLin) as well as the lecture An Introduction to the History of English (ALin1).

This course will explore the representation of some key events in English history based on original documents of the medieval and Tudor periods. The main concern will be linguistic analyses of these texts and their relevance for the history of English, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the 16th century. We will also consider the historical context: how events were represented but also, in some instances, misrepresented. As we shall see, false news is not an invention of the modern era. The course is intended for students of language as well as those with an interest in English history. It is recommended that participants are attending the lecture series An Introduction to the History of English, or have attended in a previous semester.

Recent comparative studies refer to "film musicals" as an umbrella term for all kinds of cinematic musical traditions. Unlike earlier uses of the word denoting a specific Hollywood tradition and (mostly European) transformations, "film musicals" in the more recent sense also subsumes examples from the Middle East, Latin America and Asia, with a special spotlight on Indian cinema's long and vibrant musical traditions. Tracing these developments, this seminar will seek to identify criteria of a 'world cinema' of related musical forms, apt to bring out the complex networks of cross-cultural influence and indebtedness. In most general terms, there seems to be a specific tension in film musicals as they seem to have in common, on the one hand, a special aptness for dramatizing political events (such as the ecstatic bursting-into-song as a moment of interruption, or more generally, the celebration of community spirit in group dance routines) but, on the other, often crystallize into predictable forms making them opium for the people rather than politically inspiring. A canon of a world cinema of musicals should therefore focus on films that resist this ossifying tendency.

Far from being dismissed as mass entertainment, comic books have long advanced to mature forms that not only undermine any facile division into high and low culture, but also challenge conventional ways of storytelling. This course will provide a general introduction on how to read and understand comics – and especially, their more refined variants typically referred to as graphic novels, as they hover between fantasy and memory culture, and are situated between the modes of history writing, narrative fiction and life writing. A special focus will be given to transcultural negotiations in a world-literary space.

Have you ever wondered why interaction is as unproblematic as it is? Why, for instance, do we manage to take turns in conversation without constantly interrupting each other? How do we know what our co-participants are trying to achieve with their utterances, and how do we accomplish larger projects? Why do we generally understand each other – and how do we deal with misunderstandings, slips of the tongue, or excessive background noise? Which role does language play to accomplish all of this, and which other means are available to interactants to make themselves understandable to each other? These questions have been investigated by conversation analysts for about fifty years, and generally, we now understand the mechanisms underlying everyday conversation quite well. However, from the very beginning, CA literature has pointed out that forms of institutional and workplace interaction, such as classroom talk, systematically differ from conversation in terms of these mechanisms – to a greater or lesser degree – and that it may be these differences that help us recognize that participants are engaging in, for instance, courtroom interaction, broadcast interviews, teacher-student interaction or police interrogations. This class will serve as an introduction to basic assumptions, methods and findings of Conversation Analysis (CA). We will discuss general principles of turn-taking, sequence organization and repair in conversation and, on that basis, identify constitutive features of classroom talk, news interviews and other types of institutional interaction.

As symbols of modernity and progress, trains and rails have figured as the most "magnificent machine[s]" (Miner) in the cultural, emotional, and ideological landscapes of the American nation, capturing its ideals of growth and mobility, ingenuity and dynamism, and furthering visions of national, continental, and hemispheric unity and progress. Focusing on the intersectionality of the technologies of rails and race, the course "Railroads in American Literature" addresses the continuous impact of the railroad on the African American community, history, and literature. Beginning with the discourses of the "underground railroad," the course syllabus includes narratives by African American authors as well as theoretical texts that highlight the role of the railroad in African American lives. The goals of the course are: (1) to read the discursive history of technological segregation of Black Americans and the role played by the railroad in drawing racial lines; (2) to analyze the racialization of the railroad technologies; (3) to study the poetics and politics of the African American railroad discourses, and record disruptions of the mainstream narratives; (4) to study contacts and patterns of creolization that occur across racial and technological lines; (5) to investigate African American imaginaries of the "human" and the "machine" as well as question forms of technological justice and progress envisioned by a "Black ethos" (Baraka).

The course with all additional information will be available on Moodle from 28 April 2020. Further information will follow soon.

This course will explore the representation of some key events in English history based on original documents of the medieval and Tudor periods. The main concern will be linguistic analyses of these texts and their relevance for the history of English, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the 16th century. We will also consider the historical context: how events were represented but also, in some instances, misrepresented. As we shall see, false news is not an invention of the modern era. The course is intended for students of language as well as those with an interest in English history. It is recommended that participants are attending the lecture series An Introduction to the History of English, or have attended in a previous semester.

This class is designed to introduce students to a variety of U.S. American fiction about the South. We will look at constructions of the South as we read Poe, Faulkner, Chopin, Lee and excerpts from Toni Morrison's 'Beloved' alongside secondary literature on their texts. The course will be framed by critical essays from Ta-Nehisi Coates.

Students are asked to obtain a copy of Harper Lee's 'To Kill A Mockingbird'

This seminar traces the archetyp of the femme fatale across literature and visual art forms from different cultural contexts and historical epochs. It seeks to explore the ways in which fatal femininity has been imagined and how the femme fatale simultaneously reinforces and challenges cultural stereotypes.

This class is designed to discuss adaptations, rewritings and transformative fiction with the help of critical theory. The course focuses mainly on feminist perspectives and we will be reading Angela Carter's 'The Bloody Chamber', a rewriting of the fairy tale 'Bluebeard', Margaret Atwood's 'The Handmaid's Tale' and its Hulu Adaptation, as well as some fanfiction, based on different fandoms.

Students must obtain a copy of Margaret Atwood's 'The Handmaid's Tale'.

The last decades have seen an upsurge of autobiographical writing as well as of multimedia self-presentations by disabled persons. This seminar focuses on female British authors' verbal, graphic and digital autobiographies which depict life stories shaped by physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities. "Disability" will be introduced as a fluid, intersectional identity category (a category intersecting with gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity/race) that challenges the binary opposition between "disabled" and "non-disabled", "normal" or "able-bodied". The seminar deals with the broader subject of disability as a new category in cultural and literary studies as well as with disability autobiography as a multimedia genre. We will analyse verbal, graphic and digital forms of autobiographies by investigating their narrative structures and by exploring them as creative responses to the ableist, mentalist, sexist, racist and heteronormative representations of women with physical, psychiatric and cognitive disabilities in medical discourse and the media. Furthermore, we discuss if (and how) the self-presentations in different media produce and perform unexpected, novel, controversial and strongly interactive images of bio- and neurodiversity.

For a while, it seemed fashionable in academia to declare Marxist theory dead or obsolete. In effect, the critics making such pronouncements joined in the new-right triumphalism that considered the end of the so-called Cold War and the collapse of the various "actually existing socialisms" as heralding in the unrivalled dominance of capitalism. But more recently, in the aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis, the sell-out of social-democratic parties across the Global North, the neoliberal reduction of the state to a heavily-armed capital generator, the resurgence of openly right-wing politics, and the increasingly inescapable destruction of ecosystems in the name of profit and growth, the cant of the "end of history" rings as hollow as the hopelessly naïve diagnosis of our period as a "post-ideological" one. Those developments have made it abundantly clear that exploitation and class struggle are here to stay. In turn, this state of affairs urges a renewed engagement with the theory dedicated to analyzing capitalism, with the intention thereby to contribute to its termination.

In this seminar, we will explore a number of classic Marxist concepts, such as ideology, class struggle, base/superstructure, capital, and the perennially provocative notion of economic determination. We will also clarify terms like neoliberalism and the contemporary guise of imperialism. But since this is a literary-studies class, we will also want to see for ourselves how those concepts help in reading literature. That is why we will read Thomas Ligotti's My Work Is Not Yet Done. A connoisseur of the dark and disturbing, Ligotti is often hailed as one of the best living writers of horror fiction today. In that book, he focusses specifically on the horrors of employment — which should make for an interesting read in this seminar on Marxism.

Please be aware that this is a theory-heavy seminar. We will read a number of difficult non-literary texts in addition, discussions will often revolve around abstract concepts. Interpretations of the literary texts will likely take up less space in the class compared to interpretations of the theory. If that doesn't scare you, jump aboard: you will learn a lot.

Dear students, all courses will be taught as online courses with asynchronous access until further notice. Once you have signed on in PULS and have been admitted in PULS, your instructor will email you via PULS to let you know when and how to access the online material (moodle, etc.). Testatsleistungen (course requirements) may be subject to change. Students who cannot (yet) access PULS: Please email your instructor directly. It is possible that classes can be switched to classroom teaching (Präsenzlehre) at some point during the semester. If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled.

The literature of transgression, deception, despair, and terrors both real and imaginary has proved to be as persistent as its subject-matters. Fomenting around the mid-1700s, Gothic literature has been a cultural mainstay ever since. Whether derided as a subliterary recycling of the same trite formulas over and over or praised for exemplifying the powers of the imagination, whether lambasted for its conservative ideologies or subjected to censorship for its radical ones, the Gothic has kindled responses as contradictory as itself.

In this class, we go back to some of the classics of Gothic fiction from the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries: Ann Radcliffe's The Mysteries of Udolpho, Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey, and Mary Shelley's Frankenstein. In these novels, Gothic literature has arguably reached an early peak. Simultaneously, though, each of these works embodies tensions and contradictions of content and form that point to the complexity of the Gothic. We will discuss these complications via topics ranging from the sublime and the Gothic castle to fear, the Gothic heroine, masculinity, and monstrosity. Attempts will be made both to situate the texts in some of the reigning ideologies of their day and to address aspects that have proved influential far beyond the original contexts of the work in question.

Radcliffe, Ann. The Mysteries of Udolpho (Oxford World's Classics). Ed. Bonamy Dobré. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2008 [or previous prints by Oxford]. ISBN: 978-0199537419
 Austen, Jane. Northanger Abbey (Norton Critical Edition). Ed. Susan Fraiman. New York and London: W.W. Norton, 2004. ISBN: 978-0393978506
 Shelley, Mary. Frankenstein (Second Norton Critical Edition). Ed. J. Paul Hunter. New York and London: W.W. Norton, 2012. ISBN: 978-0393927931

Secondary literature will be provided via Moodle.

I strongly suggest starting to read The Mysteries of Udolpho before the first session (as soon as possible, in fact). The novel is long, complex, and written in a style and vocabulary that might take some getting used to. This will also be the first of the novels we discuss.

If this happens, your instructor will let you know and classes will take place at the times originally scheduled. Thanks to colonialism and tourism, for centuries the Caribbean has generated intense discursive attention on the part of Europeans and North Americans. But what about Caribbeans' own views of the region? In fact, the latter has proved an immensely fertile ground for anti- and postcolonial thought of all kinds. Trenchant indictments of colonialism and important theories of racialization no less than the first trans-Atlantic studies and influential theories of the mixing of cultures have all originated in the twentieth-century Caribbean. Caribbean thinkers have thereby generated their own ideas about this complex and eminently unique region.

In this class, we will read and discuss essays of various tones and moods, from the lyrical to the analytical. Readings will mostly come from the Anglophone and Francophone Caribbean (all texts will be read in English). Topics include creolization, tourism, the struggle with colonial legacies, views of tropical nature, race, and attitudes towards Caribbean literature the thinkers we will meet include Sylvia Wynter, Édouard Glissant, Antonio Benítez-Rojo, Jamaica Kincaid, Suzanne Césaire, Derek Walcott, Michel-Rolph Trouillot, and Frantz Fanon. Attempts will be made to provide for both those beginning their study of the Caribbean and those who have already gained extensive knowledge of the region.

In this course we will be investigating how different cultural forms can suggest new ways for thinking about climate change and even afford opportunities for imagining more just and resilient futures. That is, we will consider the question: how and why do cultural productions matter in the context of climate change? Our course will engage with a variety of material, ranging from short stories and novels to podcasts and film and situate them within broader debates and discourses—scientific, historical, and political—about climate change.

The past is everywhere. This 'memory boom' (Huyssen) ranges from the restoration of old urban centres, the boom in retro fashions, the popular obsession with 'self-musealisation' on Instagram or through autobiography, and the centrality of historical documentaries on television to the increasing number of controversies about divisive historical events and their commemoration.

The seminar examines this development by exploring the different ways in which individuals and societies (re)construct and represent the past. Students will discuss foundational readings that have become central to the discussion of memory. These will be employed to engage with a wide range of cultural forms that address the themes of memory and forgetting. Topics include: the (contested) link between memory and nationhood, the function of so-called 'sites of memory', the notion of heritage, the individual and collective nature of trauma and mourning, embodied practices of memory such as testimony and witnessing.

This course aims at interrogating the 'new' medium of video games broadly along the lines of gender and postcolonial inquiry. It is designed to give an overview of approaches to digital gaming such as narratology vs. ludology, as well as its tropes. In a second step, we will apply these theories to different examples of that genre. Throughout the semester, you will create and refine research theses, which you will work into term papers. Among other things, you are required to briefly introduce one text or object for discussion in class and participate in various e-learning activities.

Upon completion of the course, you will be able to

- define and classify different approaches to digital gaming
- contrast, discuss, and criticize theoretical texts
- apply theory to different research objects
- formulate research theses and write research papers

Please note that this course accommodates a maximum of 30 students. In case registrations exceed this number, selection will take place on the basis of letters of motivation.

Given the circumstances created by Covid-19, this course is currently being restructured so as to make physical attendance ("Präsenzlehre") obsolete. Instead, it will require participation in weekly digital learning group meetings. Prospective participants need to be outfitted with the necessary devices such as webcams etc. and familiarize themselves with video conferencing tools.

Literatur

Among other things, we will discuss titles such a Bioshock: Infinite, Battlefield V, the Tomb Raider series, the Anno series and the Monkey Island series. Further suggestions including a short explanation of the relevant aspects are welcome.

The urban space is one of the most persistent and prominent motifs in African American Literature; Amiri Baraka even asserts that African American writing is at its core urban. The city therefore represents a productive vantage point on African American history as well as on the changes of literary production. In this course we will trace the representations of the city in texts from the slave narrative to contemporary African American artists and critics. We will explore the changing perspectives and images of the city from a "Promised Land" to "A Dream Deferred," which were created within these spaces, as well as about them, and try to understand the differences to the respective white American literary representations.

The long-drawn process that led to the 2016 Brexit referendum and from there to the actual secession of the UK from the EU has not only revealed the faultlines and fissures in Britain's deeply polarized society; it has also put on the agenda the question as to what kind of country Britain is, and what kind of Britain people wish to live in. Brexit, in other words, is symptomatic of a society struggling to redefine itself, its 'identity', its place in the world, in history, and in the future. These, of course, are questions that literature as a specific domain of meaning-making has always engaged with, and it should not come as a surprise that the Brexit process has provoked numerous British writers to respond to the crisis in multiple ways -- from the social realism of the 'condition of England' novel to scathing grotesque satires; from dystopian visions of a völkisch post-Brexit Britain to the reflexive, pensive or angry monologues of the 'Brexit Shorts' drama series launched by The Guardian; from poetic allegories to mock-documentary collages.

In our seminar we will read and discuss a number of representative Brexit novels, plays and poems/song lyrics, some of them snappy and catchy, others lengthy and laborious. We will frame or readings not only with the contextual specifics of the conditions that these texts respond to but also with more principal questions about the relations between literature and socio-historical and political processes.

N.B.: This is a seminar with extensive reading requirements!

Fakultative Lehrveranstaltungen

Glossar

Die folgenden Begriffserklärungen zu Prüfungsleistung, Prüfungsnebenleistung und Studienleistung gelten im Bezug auf Lehrveranstaltungen für alle Ordnungen, die seit dem WiSe 2013/14 in Kranft getreten sind.

Prüfungsleistung

Prüfungsleistungen sind benotete Leistungen innerhalb eines Moduls. Aus der Benotung der Prüfungsleistung(en) bildet sich die Modulnote, die in die Gesamtnote des Studiengangs eingeht. Handelt es sich um eine unbenotete Prüfungsleistung, so muss dieses ausdrücklich („unbenotet“) in der Modulbeschreibung der fachspezifischen Ordnung geregelt sein. Weitere Informationen, auch zu den Anmeldemöglichkeiten von Prüfungsleistungen, finden Sie unter anderem in der Kommentierung der BaMa-O

Prüfungsnebenleistung

Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind für den Abschluss eines Moduls relevante Leistungen, die – soweit sie vorgesehen sind – in der Modulbeschreibung der fachspezifischen Ordnung beschrieben sind. Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind immer unbenotet und werden lediglich mit "bestanden" bzw. "nicht bestanden" bewertet. Die Modulbeschreibung regelt, ob die Prüfungsnebenleistung eine Teilnahmevoraussetzung für eine Modulprüfung oder eine Abschlussvoraussetzung für ein ganzes Modul ist. Als Teilnahmevoraussetzung für eine Modulprüfung muss die Prüfungsnebenleistung erfolgreich vor der Anmeldung bzw. Teilnahme an der Modulprüfung erbracht worden sein. Auch für Erbringung einer Prüfungsnebenleistungen wird eine Anmeldung vorausgesetzt. Diese fällt immer mit der Belegung der Lehrveranstaltung zusammen, da Prüfungsnebenleistung im Rahmen einer Lehrveranstaltungen absolviert werden. Sieht also Ihre fachspezifische Ordnung Prüfungsnebenleistungen bei Lehrveranstaltungen vor, sind diese Lehrveranstaltungen zwingend zu belegen, um die Prüfungsnebenleistung absolvieren zu können.

Studienleistung

Als Studienleistung werden Leistungen bezeichnet, die weder Prüfungsleistungen noch Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind.
