Lerninhalte:

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able

- to comprehend and explain basic differences between lexical, grammatical, and stylistic features of German and English
 - to provide level-appropriate translations of short German texts into English
 - to communicate persuasively in an intercultural context
- Independent study is an integral component of the course.

Zielgruppe:

Studierende der Anglistik/Amerikanistik und des LA Englisch

Are you an exchange student (Erasmus or other program)?

Due to the limited number of spots in our courses, our department and the University of Potsdam's International Office have developed the following guidelines for Erasmus students:

- Erasmus and other exchange students will not be automatically admitted to courses.
- limited course spots (2 in "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck I," 2 in "Übersetzen," and 1 in "Hörverstehen und mündlicher Ausdruck II") will be reserved for Erasmus students whose major is English and/or American Studies.
- On a case by case basis, Erasmus students might be permitted to attend language courses at the Institut für Anglistik und Amerikanistik (Masters-level courses). Please contact the Institute directly.

Leistungsnachweis

Eine Abschlussklausur (von Ihrer Studienordnung abhängig). Studierende der Anglistik/Amerikanistik, die im WiSe 2013/14 und im WiSe 2014/15 immatrikuliert wurden, bekommen keine Note für diesen Kurs, sondern eine Note für "Schriftlicher Ausdruck (4 SWS)" nach erfolgreichem Abschluss der Übung "Schriftlicher Ausdruck II" im folgenden Semester. Siehe bitte hierzu "Informationen für Studierende der Anglistik/Amerikanistik, die vor dem WiSe 2015/16 immatrikuliert wurden" auf unserer Webseite.

Hinweis: Die Anzahl an LP (Leistungspunkten = 3) entspricht der Anzahl an ECTS-Punkten.

Note: The number of LP (Leistungspunkte = 3) equals the number of ECTS points.

Laut aktueller Modulbeschreibung ist die regelmäßige Anwesenheit obligatorisch. Die Anwesenheit in den sprachpraktischen Lehrveranstaltungen ist dringend erforderlich, weil andernfalls die Lernziele nicht erreicht werden können und eine Leistungserfassung im Sinne der Prüfungsordnung nicht möglich ist.

Lerninhalte

This two-hour writing course centers on the response paper. Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able

- to express themselves clearly at the sentence and paragraph levels
- to utilize critical reading skills for their academic writing
- to differentiate between conventions in spoken and written English
- to comprehend and correctly utilize lexical, grammatical, and organizational patterns of effective written communication
- to draft, evaluate, and edit their own and others' texts effectively (peer review)
- to cite appropriate sources properly (MLA)

Students are required to submit assignments on a regular basis. Independent study is an integral component of the course.

In accordance with University of Potsdam policy (§ 17 BAMA(LA)-O), the Department of English / Philology has defined the unauthorized use of AI tools, including ChatGPT, to complete graded assessments or exams in the Department's courses. It is unauthorized to use AI to formulate arguments or to summarize or contextualize source materials or to incorporate any part of an AI-generated response in a graded assignment or exam. Such unauthorized use is, by definition, a "Täuschung," and will be dealt with accordingly.

Lerninhalte

Upon successful completion of this course, students should be able to:

- recognize and practice appropriate articulation of English phonemes
- raise awareness of and practise the suprasegmental features of English, including stress and intonation patterns, as well as connected speech
- learn how to identify interference from one's native language and develop skills for speaking intelligibly
- recognize and comprehend a variety of accents to navigate different communicative contexts
- discuss relevant topics with the goal of engaging in meaningful discourse in different contexts (e.g. presentations and interviews)
- gain insight into the interconnection between pronunciation and non-verbal behaviour in conveying and interpreting meaning, particularly when giving academic presentations.

Students are required to submit assignments on a regular basis. Independent study is an integral component of the course. Students are strongly encouraged to attend the English Language Café. (Your instructor will provide you with information; see also the departmental website.)

Lerninhalte:

This two-hour writing course centers on essay writing and the argumentative essay in particular. Upon completion of this course, students will be able

- to express themselves using nuanced language (improved accuracy and appropriacy of writing)
- to produce cohesive and coherent academic writing (improved complexity and effectiveness of writing)
- to identify and produce various types of academic texts
- to evaluate their own and others' texts (peer review)
- to assess and cite (MLA) appropriate sources properly

Students are strongly encouraged to consult with the Writing Assistance Program at Zessko (this is not a course tutorial).

This is the first part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in English linguistics. It aims to introduce students to the nature of language and the major domains of linguistic inquiry as well as its basic concepts, principles and tools in the following areas: Phonetics, Phonology, Morphology and Lexical Semantics. Students will

- excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions,
- test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions,
- clarify questions in class, and
- complete assignments

in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies.

There will be quizzes and a mock exam.

Please note that this course is offered by different instructors on different time slots every week.

Tutorials (which provide you with further practice) will be announced at the beginning of the semester. It is strongly recommended that students attend one of these tutorials regularly.

We strongly recommend attending this course in parallel with part II.

The course offers an introduction to the history of the English language from its origins to the present day. It explores the linguistic roots of English, the changes in pronunciation and loss of inflections, as well as the enormous expansion in vocabulary, which characterises the development of English. We will also consider the different varieties of English in evidence today and the similarities and dissimilarities between English and other Germanic languages. Among the difficulties encountered by ESL/EFL students are the English system of tenses as well as the discrepancy between spelling and pronunciation: these will all be addressed in this series of lectures.

This course is meant as an introduction to the Old English language spoken 1000 years ago by the Anglo-Saxon inhabitants of Britain and which is the origin of what is known as Modern English. Special attention will be paid to grammatical and phonological peculiarities of that language. Students will have to acquire a minimal basic vocabulary of Old English and the appropriate techniques of translating Old English texts. The seminar aims at (1) a better understanding of the Modern English language via knowledge of its history, (2) enabling students to read and translate simple Anglo-Saxon texts with the help of a dictionary.

This course aims at introducing participants to fundamental concepts, current research questions and methodologies in the study of Second Language Acquisition (SLA), and will take an interdisciplinary approach. Thus SLA will be considered from linguistic (what is learned), psychological (how is knowledge acquired) and social (in which contexts) perspectives and multiple interactions of these factors will be explored. In these areas, different theories of SLA and the critical reactions to them will be examined.

This course draws on students' prior knowledge of linguistics (pronunciation, lexis, grammar) to further understandings of additional language use through close analysis of naturalistic spoken and written data from classroom (and other) contexts where English is used as a foreign/additional (L2) language. It also offers an introduction to microanalytic research focused on the resources mobilized by L2 language users in a range of settings.

PREREQUISITES

Please be aware that you must have successfully completed the Grundmodul Linguistik to be able to attend this class. As this course draws heavily on the contents covered in the Grundmodul Linguistik, students are encouraged to review the contents of both GK1 and GK2 courses on a weekly basis.

LEARNING OUTCOME

After attending this class, participants are expected to be able to

- map linguistic features to linguistic sub-systems;
- describe relevant phenomena of L2 language use according to the linguistic aspects and metalanguage studied in class;
- compare samples of L2 language use;
- display basic understanding of the research methods within approaches that investigate L2 language use in detail;
- read transcriptions of naturalistic conversations;
- formulate questions connecting description of L2 use and teaching/the future professional field.

This class concerns linguistics beyond the sentence level. It sheds light on text, discourse and communication from a linguistic perspective, which will enable students to critically assess larger pieces of communication. After attending this class, participants are expected to be able to show understanding of, and apply, models and concepts discussed in class, such as

- discourse and context
- language and society
- Conversation Analysis (CA)
- Text linguistics and textuality

Participants are also expected to be able to present their thoughts in a suitable (spoken and written) manner, so that they later can access these skills, both in advanced classes concerned with the subject matter and in their working environment.

Investigating the display of language in public space is the objective of the emerging research field of linguistic landscapes. Expanding this basic concept, linguistic landscape studies examine not only text but also other semiotic resources such as images, sounds, scents, architecture, and human practices. The ensemble of semiotic and linguistic resources forms a kaleidoscope of the cultural and social diversity of a given territory, as well as the underlying dynamics in terms of linguistic developments and repertoires, negotiations and contestations of social identity, and other issues of social change. Given the interdisciplinary nature of the field, this course offers theoretical insights through discussion of seminal studies and innovative approaches to the study of linguistic landscapes, as well as practical research experience. The course is designed as a research seminar in which students will be guided through the development and realisation of small-scale research projects. As the projects will be carried out in small groups, regular attendance, completion of weekly prep tasks, and a willingness to work with others are expected.

This basic course will focus on accomplishing action with language. In particular, we will study the use of English as a tool for communication in a range of work contexts. Based on your linguistic knowledge so far, we will survey a number of lexical and syntactic forms in English and their usage in particular contexts. Moreover, participants will encounter practical examples of English at work in Germany, including advertising, political discourse, and language teaching among others, and we will discuss the challenges of using English as a foreign language.

This course aims at introducing participants to fundamental concepts, current research questions and methodologies in the study of Second Language Acquisition (SLA). and will take an interdisciplinary approach. Thus SLA will be considered from linguistic (what is learned), psychological (how is knowledge acquired) and social (in which contexts) perspectives and multiple interactions of these factors will be explored. In these areas, different theories of SLA and the critical reactions to them will be examined.

This course is meant as an introduction to the Old English language spoken 1000 years ago by the Anglo-Saxon inhabitants of Britain and which is the origin of what is known as Modern English. Special attention will be paid to grammatical and phonological peculiarities of that language. Students will have to acquire a minimal basic vocabulary of Old English and the appropriate techniques of translating Old English texts. The seminar aims at (1) a better understanding of the Modern English language via knowledge of its history, (2) enabling students to read and translate simple Anglo-Saxon texts with the help of a dictionary.

This course draws on students' prior knowledge of linguistics (pronunciation, lexis, grammar) to further understandings of additional language use through close analysis of naturalistic spoken and written data from classroom (and other) contexts where English is used as a foreign/additional (L2) language. It also offers an introduction to microanalytic research focused on the resources mobilized by L2 language users in a range of settings.

PREREQUISITES

Please be aware that you must have successfully completed the Grundmodul Linguistik to be able to attend this class. As this course draws heavily on the contents covered in the Grundmodul Linguistik, students are encouraged to review the contents of both GK1 and GK2 courses on a weekly basis.

LEARNING OUTCOME

After attending this class, participants are expected to be able to

- map linguistic features to linguistic sub-systems;
- describe relevant phenomena of L2 language use according to the linguistic aspects and metalanguage studied in class;
- compare samples of L2 language use;
- display basic understanding of the research methods within approaches that investigate L2 language use in detail;
- read transcriptions of naturalistic conversations;
- formulate questions connecting description of L2 use and teaching/the future professional field.

Investigating the display of language in public space is the objective of the emerging research field of linguistic landscapes. Expanding this basic concept, linguistic landscape studies examine not only text but also other semiotic resources such as images, sounds, scents, architecture, and human practices. The ensemble of semiotic and linguistic resources forms a kaleidoscope of the cultural and social diversity of a given territory, as well as the underlying dynamics in terms of linguistic developments and repertoires, negotiations and contestations of social identity, and other issues of social change. Given the interdisciplinary nature of the field, this course offers theoretical insights through discussion of seminal studies and innovative approaches to the study of linguistic landscapes, as well as practical research experience. The course is designed as a research seminar in which students will be guided through the development and realisation of small-scale research projects. As the projects will be carried out in small groups, regular attendance, completion of weekly prep tasks, and a willingness to work with others are expected.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism.

Please note that this is a reading-intensive course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Beyoncé occupies a complex position within contemporary cultural studies. Through her creative works, which broadly encompass music, visuals, dance and poetry, Beyoncé engages various identity politics. This has led to her work being perceived as empowering, appropriative, liberatory and conformist, among other descriptions. In this course, music from Beyoncé's oeuvre will be positioned as a cultural text through which elements of critical theory can be decoded. Students will be required to present critical engagements of Beyoncé's music in class.

Before 1991, the postcolonial Somalia stood out as one of the promising countries in East Africa. This was attributed to its rich cultural heritage, cohesive society, and distinctive colonial past. However, a coup in 1991 dramatically altered Somalia's trajectory and set its people on a path of constant movement. Today, Somalis rank among the most mobile people in Africa. The Somali landscape literary now mirrors this mobility and captures their aspirations, setbacks, uncertainties, and encounters abroad. This course aims to delve into the vibrant world of Somali migrant literature. We will explore how reflections on Somali culture and experiences resonate throughout these literary works, offering insights into the Somali diaspora's journey across the globe.

We will explore these ideas through the following texts:

- 1) Bisharo Abdullahi: The First Winter: Stories of Survival by Experienced Hearts (2019).
- 2) Nuruddin Farah: North of Dawn (2018)
- 3) Hassan Ghedi Santur: The Youth of God (2019).

Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism?

In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues.

The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle.

Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism? In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues. The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Tea is one of the most famous cultural "products" from England with the idea of English breakfast tea, among other forms, becoming synonymous with Englishness itself. In this class, we will be looking at the history of tea and how it came to fascinate various English businessmen and explorers in the 18th and 19th century by reading their travel writing. Primarily by reading the travelogues of English explorers and botanists who made explorations into "tea country" (in China), the question that we will be answering is this: What does reading these travelogues tell us about the global commodification of tea that shaped trade routes and empires? We will read how tea became a product that was at the centre of colonial expansion, colonising environments, and creating a product that has continued to be sold to this day. While reading these accounts via Mary Louise Pratt's book on travel writing, we will also be touching upon studies on tea from the last 10 years which expands greatly upon the colonial history of tea.

All the course material will be provided on Moodle for the course. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Published as Jane Eyre: An Autobiography in 1847, Charlotte Brontë's novel has been dissected by postcolonial critics for a very long time for its portrayal of Bertha Mason and for the way that characters have spoken about missionary work in India. In this class, we will be touching upon the gothic setting of the novel and its use of mystery as being important to the characterisation of the "mad woman in the attic" who also happens to be from the Caribbean. The larger aim of the class would be to read the gothic genre into the novel's setting and contextualising it within the socio-political context of English colonialism.

Throughout the semester, students will be expected to be read Jane Eyre and Jean Rhys' seminal 1966 novel Wide Sargasso Sea. Rhys' novel will provide us the wider context of the novel and students will be required to read portions of the two novels regularly for class.

The two novels and other material will be provided on Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism. Please note that this is a reading-intense course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Beyoncé occupies a complex position within contemporary cultural studies. Through her creative works, which broadly encompass music, visuals, dance and poetry, Beyoncé engages various identity politics. This has led to her work being perceived as empowering, appropriative, liberatory and conformist, among other descriptions. Before 1991, the postcolonial Somalia stood out as one of the promising countries in East Africa. This was attributed to its rich cultural heritage, cohesive society, and distinctive colonial past. However, a coup in 1991 dramatically altered Somalia's trajectory and set its people on a path of constant movement. Today, Somalis rank among the most mobile people in Africa. The Somali landscape literary now mirrors this mobility and captures their aspirations, setbacks, uncertainties, and encounters abroad. This course aims to delve into the vibrant world of Somali migrant literature. We will explore how reflections on Somali culture and experiences resonate throughout these literary works, offering insights into the Somali diaspora's journey across the globe.

We will explore these ideas through the following texts:

- 1) Bisharo Abdullahi: The First Winter: Stories of Survival by Experienced Hearts (2019).
- 2) Nuruddin Farah: North of Dawn (2018)
- 3) Hassan Ghedi Santur: The Youth of God (2019).
- 4) Waris Dirie: Desert Flower: The Extraordinary Journey of a Desert Nomad (2011)

Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism?

In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues.

The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle.

Tea is one of the most famous cultural "products" from England with the idea of English breakfast tea, among other forms, becoming synonymous with Englishness itself. In this class, we will be looking at the history of tea and how it came to fascinate various English businessmen and explorers in the 18th and 19th century by reading their travel writing. Primarily by reading the travelogues of English explorers and botanists who made explorations into "tea country" (in China), the question that we will be answering is this: What does reading these travelogues tell us about the global commodification of tea that shaped trade routes and empires? We will read how tea became a product that was at the centre of colonial expansion, colonising environments, and creating a product that has continued to be sold to this day. While reading these accounts via Mary Louise Pratt's book on travel writing, we will also be touching upon studies on tea from the last 10 years which expands greatly upon the colonial history of tea.

All the course material will be provided on Moodle for the course. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Published as Jane Eyre: An Autobiography in 1847, Charlotte Brontë's novel has been dissected by postcolonial critics for a very long time for its portrayal of Bertha Mason and for the way that characters have spoken about missionary work in India. In this class, we will be touching upon the gothic setting of the novel and its use of mystery as being important to the characterisation of the "mad woman in the attic" who also happens to be from the Caribbean. The larger aim of the class would be to read the gothic genre into the novel's setting and contextualising it within the socio-political context of English colonialism.

Throughout the semester, students will be expected to be read Jane Eyre and Jean Rhys' seminal 1966 novel Wide Sargasso Sea. Rhys' novel will provide us the wider context of the novel and students will be required to read portions of the two novels regularly for class.

The two novels and other material will be provided on Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

This seminar is designed to give you an introduction to reading graphic novels. In a first step, we will look at their generic conventions before we will analyse a variety of comics. These will include Alice Oseman's Heartstopper as well as Lesley Fairfield's Tyranny, two texts that deal with young adults and might also be interesting for use in schools.

This class is designed as an introduction to feminist theory and attempts to represent a broad range of approaches to give you a first overview. Still, as feminist theory has developed in many contexts and geographical locations, it is impossible to give you an idea of everything that has happened in this exciting field. We will cover a number of influential texts in shortened versions while input sessions will allow you to broaden your own outlook and discover the fields interesting for your own research.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism.

Please note that this is a reading-intensive course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Beyoncé occupies a complex position within contemporary cultural studies. Through her creative works, which broadly encompass music, visuals, dance and poetry, Beyoncé engages various identity politics. This has led to her work being perceived as empowering, appropriative, liberatory and conformist, among other descriptions. In this course, music from Beyoncé's oeuvre will be positioned as a cultural text through which elements of critical theory can be decoded. Students will be required to present critical engagements of Beyoncé's music in class.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

This hands-on course is part of the "Key Competences" module in English Linguistics. It serves as a practical counterpart of the "Introduction to Synchronic Linguistics I/II." This course focuses on basic academic working techniques in the field of English linguistics, such as literature research, data collection and processing, writing academic papers as well as preparing presentations in linguistics. Furthermore, students will be introduced to various methods of empirical linguistic analysis, including the use of electronic text corpora.

This seminar will focus on some key skills that you develop and employ during your studies and beyond. We will ask: What do we do in English and American Studies, what are some of the field's central approaches, and how is this useful for your future career? Over the course of the seminar, you will develop a plan for a creative/academic project that builds on your skills and interests. At the end of the semester, all students will present their project and show how diverse the career opportunities are for humanities graduates.

Lerninhalte

Upon successful completion of this course, students should be able to:

- recognize and practice appropriate articulation of English phonemes
- raise awareness of and practise the suprasegmental features of English, including stress and intonation patterns, as well as connected speech
- learn how to identify interference from one's native language and develop skills for speaking intelligibly
- recognize and comprehend a variety of accents to navigate different communicative contexts
- discuss relevant topics with the goal of engaging in meaningful discourse in different contexts (e.g. presentations and interviews)
- gain insight into the interconnection between pronunciation and non-verbal behaviour in conveying and interpreting meaning, particularly when giving academic presentations.

Students are required to submit assignments on a regular basis. Independent study is an integral component of the course. Students are strongly encouraged to attend the English Language Café. (Your instructor will provide you with information; see also the departmental website.)

This is the first part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in English linguistics. It aims to introduce students to the nature of language and the major domains of linguistic inquiry as well as its basic concepts, principles and tools in the following areas: Phonetics, Phonology, Morphology and Lexical Semantics. Students will
 - excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions,
 - test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions,
 - clarify questions in class, and
 - complete assignments
 in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies.

There will be quizzes and a mock exam.

Please note that this course is offered by different instructors on different time slots every week.

Tutorials (which provide you with further practice) will be announced at the beginning of the semester. It is strongly recommended that students attend one of these tutorials regularly.

We strongly recommend attending this course in parallel with part II.

This is the second part of a two-course module which lays the groundwork for all further coursework in linguistics. In this course, students will learn about aspects of syntax, i.e. how phrases, clauses, and sentences are formed. They

- excerpt the relevant knowledge from course-specific online material and/or literature on the basis of guiding questions,
- test their understanding by applying their newly acquired knowledge to exercise questions,
- clarify questions in class, and
- complete assignments, which also include application tasks

in order to later be able to use these skills in the advanced linguistics courses in their BA and MA studies. We strongly recommend attending this course in parallel with part I.

The course offers an introduction to the history of the English language from its origins to the present day. It explores the linguistic roots of English, the changes in pronunciation and loss of inflections, as well as the enormous expansion in vocabulary, which characterises the development of English. We will also consider the different varieties of English in evidence today and the similarities and dissimilarities between English and other Germanic languages. Among the difficulties encountered by ESL/EFL students are the English system of tenses as well as the discrepancy between spelling and pronunciation: these will all be addressed in this series of lectures.

This course is meant as an introduction to the Old English language spoken 1000 years ago by the Anglo-Saxon inhabitants of Britain and which is the origin of what is known as Modern English. Special attention will be paid to grammatical and phonological peculiarities of that language. Students will have to acquire a minimal basic vocabulary of Old English and the appropriate techniques of translating Old English texts. The seminar aims at (1) a better understanding of the Modern English language via knowledge of its history, (2) enabling students to read and translate simple Anglo-Saxon texts with the help of a dictionary.

This course aims at introducing participants to fundamental concepts, current research questions and methodologies in the study of Second Language Acquisition (SLA), and will take an interdisciplinary approach. Thus SLA will be considered from linguistic (what is learned), psychological (how is knowledge acquired) and social (in which contexts) perspectives and multiple interactions of these factors will be explored. In these areas, different theories of SLA and the critical reactions to them will be examined.

Kommentar

This course draws on students' prior knowledge of linguistics (pronunciation, lexis, grammar) to further understandings of additional language use through close analysis of naturalistic spoken and written data from classroom (and other) contexts where English is used as a foreign/additional (L2) language. It also offers an introduction to microanalytic research focused on the resources mobilized by L2 language users in a range of settings.

PREREQUISITES

Please be aware that you must have successfully completed the Grundmodul Linguistik to be able to attend this class. As this course draws heavily on the contents covered in the Grundmodul Linguistik, students are encouraged to review the contents of both GK1 and GK2 courses on a weekly basis.

LEARNING OUTCOME

After attending this class, participants are expected to be able to

- map linguistic features to linguistic sub-systems;
- describe relevant phenomena of L2 language use according to the linguistic aspects and metalanguage studied in class;
- compare samples of L2 language use;
- display basic understanding of the research methods within approaches that investigate L2 language use in detail;
- read transcriptions of naturalistic conversations;
- formulate questions connecting description of L2 use and teaching/the future professional field.

This class concerns linguistics beyond the sentence level. It sheds light on text, discourse and communication from a linguistic perspective, which will enable students to critically assess larger pieces of communication. After attending this class, participants are expected to be able to show understanding of, and apply, models and concepts discussed in class, such as

- discourse and context
- language and society
- Conversation Analysis (CA)
- Text linguistics and textuality

Participants are also expected to be able to present their thoughts in a suitable (spoken and written) manner, so that they later can access these skills, both in advanced classes concerned with the subject matter and in their working environment.

Investigating the display of language in public space is the objective of the emerging research field of linguistic landscapes. Expanding this basic concept, linguistic landscape studies examine not only text but also other semiotic resources such as images, sounds, scents, architecture, and human practices. The ensemble of semiotic and linguistic resources forms a kaleidoscope of the cultural and social diversity of a given territory, as well as the underlying dynamics in terms of linguistic developments and repertoires, negotiations and contestations of social identity, and other issues of social change. Given the interdisciplinary nature of the field, this course offers theoretical insights through discussion of seminal studies and innovative approaches to the study of linguistic landscapes, as well as practical research experience. The course is designed as a research seminar in which students will be guided through the development and realisation of small-scale research projects. As the projects will be carried out in small groups, regular attendance, completion of weekly prep tasks, and a willingness to work with others are expected.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism.

Please note that this is a reading-intensive course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Beyoncé occupies a complex position within contemporary cultural studies. Through her creative works, which broadly encompass music, visuals, dance and poetry, Beyoncé engages various identity politics. This has led to her work being perceived as empowering, appropriative, liberatory and conformist, among other descriptions. In this course, music from Beyoncé's oeuvre will be positioned as a cultural text through which elements of critical theory can be decoded. Students will be required to present critical engagements of Beyoncé's music in class.

Before 1991, the postcolonial Somalia stood out as one of the promising countries in East Africa. This was attributed to its rich cultural heritage, cohesive society, and distinctive colonial past. However, a coup in 1991 dramatically altered Somalia's trajectory and set its people on a path of constant movement. Today, Somalis rank among the most mobile people in Africa. The Somali landscape literary now mirrors this mobility and captures their aspirations, setbacks, uncertainties, and encounters abroad. This course aims to delve into the vibrant world of Somali migrant literature. Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism? In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues. The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism.

Please note that this is a reading-intensive course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Literatur

Witi Ihimaera, The Whale Rider
 Salman Rushdie, Midnight's Children
 Toni Morrison, Beloved

Pauline Melville, The Ventriloquist's Tale

Additional material will be made available online via Moodle. The Whale Rider must be read before the beginning of term.

Before 1991, the postcolonial Somalia stood out as one of the promising countries in East Africa. This was attributed to its rich cultural heritage, cohesive society, and distinctive colonial past. However, a coup in 1991 dramatically altered Somalia's trajectory and set its people on a path of constant movement. Today, Somalis rank among the most mobile people in Africa. The Somali landscape literary now mirrors this mobility and captures their aspirations, setbacks, uncertainties, and encounters abroad. This course aims to delve into the vibrant world of Somali migrant literature. We will explore how reflections on Somali culture and experiences resonate throughout these literary works, offering insights into the Somali diaspora's journey across the globe.

We will explore these ideas through the following texts:

- 1) Bisharo Abdullahi: The First Winter: Stories of Survival by Experienced Hearts (2019).
- 2) Nuruddin Farah: North of Dawn (2018)
- 3) Hassan Ghedi Santur: The Youth of God (2019).
- 4) Waris Dirie: Desert Flower: The Extraordinary Journey of a Desert Nomad (2011)

These books can be found via Amazon.

Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism?

In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues.

The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Tea is one of the most famous cultural "products" from England with the idea of English breakfast tea, among other forms, becoming synonymous with Englishness itself. In this class, we will be looking at the history of tea and how it came to fascinate various English businessmen and explorers in the 18th and 19th century by reading their travel writing. Primarily by reading the travelogues of English explorers and botanists who made explorations into "tea country" (in China), the question that we will be answering is this: What does reading these travelogues tell us about the global commodification of tea that shaped trade routes and empires? We will read how tea became a product that was at the centre of colonial expansion, colonising environments, and creating a product that has continued to be sold to this day. While reading these accounts via Mary Louise Pratt's book on travel writing, we will also be touching upon studies on tea from the last 10 years which expands greatly upon the colonial history of tea.

All the course material will be provided on Moodle for the course. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Published as Jane Eyre: An Autobiography in 1847, Charlotte Brontë's novel has been dissected by postcolonial critics for a very long time for its portrayal of Bertha Mason and for the way that characters have spoken about missionary work in India. In this class, we will be touching upon the gothic setting of the novel and its use of mystery as being important to the characterisation of the "mad woman in the attic" who also happens to be from the Caribbean. The larger aim of the class would be to read the gothic genre into the novel's setting and contextualising it within the socio-political context of English colonialism.

Throughout the semester, students will be expected to be read Jane Eyre and Jean Rhys' seminal 1966 novel Wide Sargasso Sea. Rhys' novel will provide us the wider context of the novel and students will be required to read portions of the two novels regularly for class.

The two novels and other material will be provided on Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism.

Please note that this is a reading-intensive course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Literatur

Salman Rushdie, Midnight's Children
Toni Morrison, Beloved

Pauline Melville, The Ventriloquist's Tale
Additional material will be made available online via Moodle. The Whale Rider must be read before the beginning of term.

Beyoncé occupies a complex position within contemporary cultural studies. Through her creative works, which broadly encompass music, visuals, dance and poetry, Beyoncé engages various identity politics. This has led to her work being perceived as empowering, appropriative, liberatory and conformist, among other descriptions. In this course, music from Beyoncé's oeuvre will be positioned as a cultural text through which elements of critical theory can be decoded. Students will be required to present critical engagements of Beyoncé's music in class.

Before 1991, the postcolonial Somalia stood out as one of the promising countries in East Africa. This was attributed to its rich cultural heritage, cohesive society, and distinctive colonial past. However, a coup in 1991 dramatically altered Somalia's trajectory and set its people on a path of constant movement. Today, Somalis rank among the most mobile people in Africa. The Somali landscape literary now mirrors this mobility and captures their aspirations, setbacks, uncertainties, and encounters abroad. This course aims to delve into the vibrant world of Somali migrant literature. We will explore how reflections on Somali culture and experiences resonate throughout these literary works, offering insights into the Somali diaspora's journey across the globe.
We will explore these ideas through the following texts:
1) Bisharo Abdullahi: The First Winter: Stories of Survival by Experienced Hearts (2019). 2) Nuruddin Farah: North of Dawn (2018) 3) Hassan Ghedi Santur: The Youth of God (2019). 4) Waris Dirie: Desert Flower: The Extraordinary Journey of a Desert Nomad (2011)
These books can be found via Amazon.

Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism?

In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues.

The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle.

Tea is one of the most famous cultural "products" from England with the idea of English breakfast tea, among other forms, becoming synonymous with Englishness itself. In this class, we will be looking at the history of tea and how it came to fascinate various English businessmen and explorers in the 18th and 19th century by reading their travel writing. Primarily by reading the travelogues of English explorers and botanists who made explorations into "tea country" (in China), the question that we will be answering is this: What does reading these travelogues tell us about the global commodification of tea that shaped trade routes and empires? We will read how tea became a product that was at the centre of colonial expansion, colonising environments, and creating a product that has continued to be sold to this day. While reading these accounts via Mary Louise Pratt's book on travel writing, we will also be touching upon studies on tea from the last 10 years which expands greatly upon the colonial history of tea.

All the course material will be provided on Moodle for the course. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Published as Jane Eyre: An Autobiography in 1847, Charlotte Brontë's novel has been dissected by postcolonial critics for a very long time for its portrayal of Bertha Mason and for the way that characters have spoken about missionary work in India. In this class, we will be touching upon the gothic setting of the novel and its use of mystery as being important to the characterisation of the "mad woman in the attic" who also happens to be from the Caribbean. The larger aim of the class would be to read the gothic genre into the novel's setting and contextualising it within the socio-political context of English colonialism.

Throughout the semester, students will be expected to be read Jane Eyre and Jean Rhys' seminal 1966 novel Wide Sargasso Sea. Rhys' novel will provide us the wider context of the novel and students will be required to read portions of the two novels regularly for class.

The two novels and other material will be provided on Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. This class is designed as an introduction to feminist theory and attempts to represent a broad range of approaches to give you a first overview. Still, as feminist theory has developed in many contexts and geographical locations, it is impossible to give you an idea of everything that has happened in this exciting field. We will cover a number of influential texts in shortened versions while input sessions will allow you to broaden your own outlook and discover the fields interesting for your own research.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism. Please note that this is a reading-intensive course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Before 1991, the postcolonial Somalia stood out as one of the promising countries in East Africa. This was attributed to its rich cultural heritage, cohesive society, and distinctive colonial past. However, a coup in 1991 dramatically altered Somalia's trajectory and set its people on a path of constant movement. Today, Somalis rank among the most mobile people in Africa. The Somali landscape literary now mirrors this mobility and captures their aspirations, setbacks, uncertainties, and encounters abroad. This course aims to delve into the vibrant world of Somali migrant literature. We will explore how reflections on Somali culture and experiences resonate throughout these literary works, offering insights into the Somali diaspora's journey across the globe. We will explore these ideas through the following texts: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) Bisharo Abdullahi: The First Winter: Stories of Survival by Experienced Hearts (2019). 2) Nuruddin Farah: North of Dawn (2018) 3) Hassan Ghedi Santur: The Youth of God (2019). 4) Waris Dirie: Desert Flower: The Extraordinary Journey of a Desert Nomad (2011) These books can be found via Amazon.

Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism?

In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues.

The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle.

Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Tea is one of the most famous cultural "products" from England with the idea of English breakfast tea, among other forms, becoming synonymous with Englishness itself. In this class, we will be looking at the history of tea and how it came to fascinate various English businessmen and explorers in the 18th and 19th century by reading their travel writing. Primarily by reading the travelogues of English explorers and botanists who made explorations into "tea country" (in China), the question that we will be answering is this: What does reading these travelogues tell us about the global commodification of tea that shaped trade routes and empires? We will read how tea became a product that was at the centre of colonial expansion, colonising environments, and creating a product that has continued to be sold to this day. While reading these accounts via Mary Louise Pratt's book on travel writing, we will also be touching upon studies on tea from the last 10 years which expands greatly upon the colonial history of tea.

All the course material will be provided on Moodle for the course. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Published as Jane Eyre: An Autobiography in 1847, Charlotte Brontë's novel has been dissected by postcolonial critics for a very long time for its portrayal of Bertha Mason and for the way that characters have spoken about missionary work in India. In this class, we will be touching upon the gothic setting of the novel and its use of mystery as being important to the characterisation of the "mad woman in the attic" who also happens to be from the Caribbean. The larger aim of the class would be to read the gothic genre into the novel's setting and contextualising it within the socio-political context of English colonialism.

Throughout the semester, students will be expected to be read Jane Eyre and Jean Rhys' seminal 1966 novel Wide Sargasso Sea. Rhys' novel will provide us the wider context of the novel and students will be required to read portions of the two novels regularly for class.

The two novels and other material will be provided on Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

In this seminar we will read and study four novels (and one or the other short story) about children who are mysteriously linked to history in different parts of the world. A better understanding of their fate, and of the narrative strategies involved in telling their stories requires us to do some reading into theories of magical / decolonial realism.

Please note that this is a reading-intensive course; three of the four novels are long and dense: I strongly advise that you start reading them during term break.

Literatur

Witi Ihimaera, The Whale Rider
 Salman Rushdie, Midnight's Children
 Toni Morrison, Beloved

Pauline Melville, The Ventriloquist's Tale
 Additional material will be made available online via Moodle. The Whale Rider must be read before the beginning of term.

Beyoncé occupies a complex position within contemporary cultural studies. Through her creative works, which broadly encompass music, visuals, dance and poetry, Beyoncé engages various identity politics. This has led to her work being perceived as empowering, appropriative, liberatory and conformist, among other descriptions. In this course, music from Beyoncé's oeuvre will be positioned as a cultural text through which elements of critical theory can be decoded. Students will be required to present critical engagements of Beyoncé's music in class.

Before 1991, the postcolonial Somalia stood out as one of the promising countries in East Africa. This was attributed to its rich cultural heritage, cohesive society, and distinctive colonial past. However, a coup in 1991 dramatically altered Somalia's trajectory and set its people on a path of constant movement. Today, Somalis rank among the most mobile people in Africa. The Somali landscape literary now mirrors this mobility and captures their aspirations, setbacks, uncertainties, and encounters abroad. This course aims to delve into the vibrant world of Somali migrant literature. We will explore how reflections on Somali culture and experiences resonate throughout these literary works, offering insights into the Somali diaspora's journey across the globe.
We will explore these ideas through the following texts:
1) Bisharo Abdullahi: The First Winter: Stories of Survival by Experienced Hearts (2019).
2) Nuruddin Farah: North of Dawn (2018)
3) Hassan Ghedi Santur: The Youth of God (2019).
4) Waris Dirie: Desert Flower: The Extraordinary Journey of a Desert Nomad (2011)

Arthur Conan Doyle's most famous character Sherlock Holmes has been one of the most famous detectives in the history of fiction in a genre that has spawned other famous detectives like Miss Maple, Hercule Poirot (or even Batman?) among others. Yet, the fascination with Sherlock Holmes has persisted in the 21st century in the form of film and TV adaptations with famous actors like Benedict Cumberbatch playing the detective. In this course, we will be talking about the detective in a different vein: his "adaptation" by a Tibetan writer who mingles the 19th century detective and brings in other famous characters to talk about Tibet and the Great Game. Could this be seen as a form of fan-fic? Or does adaptation of Sherlock create a different (textual) site of existence where Sherlock Holmes allows us to talk about colonialism?

In this course, we will be discussing Sherlock Holmes and (post)colonial studies by discussing some early Sherlock mysteries where the colonial metropolis is the site of mystery and intrigue. The class will then talk about the way in which detective fiction functions before delving into the novel itself. We will be reading the novel via talking about issues of colonialism, writing back to the empire, and the ways in which adaptation creates a hybrid space for discussing these issues.

The novel, along with the short stories, and the reading material will be provided via Moodle.

Tea is one of the most famous cultural "products" from England with the idea of English breakfast tea, among other forms, becoming synonymous with Englishness itself. In this class, we will be looking at the history of tea and how it came to fascinate various English businessmen and explorers in the 18th and 19th century by reading their travel writing. Primarily by reading the travelogues of English explorers and botanists who made explorations into "tea country" (in China), the question that we will be answering is this: What does reading these travelogues tell us about the global commodification of tea that shaped trade routes and empires? We will read how tea became a product that was at the centre of colonial expansion, colonising environments, and creating a product that has continued to be sold to this day. While reading these accounts via Mary Louise Pratt's book on travel writing, we will also be touching upon studies on tea from the last 10 years which expands greatly upon the colonial history of tea.

All the course material will be provided on Moodle for the course. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Published as Jane Eyre: An Autobiography in 1847, Charlotte Brontë's novel has been dissected by postcolonial critics for a very long time for its portrayal of Bertha Mason and for the way that characters have spoken about missionary work in India. In this class, we will be touching upon the gothic setting of the novel and its use of mystery as being important to the characterisation of the "mad woman in the attic" who also happens to be from the Caribbean. The larger aim of the class would be to read the gothic genre into the novel's setting and contextualising it within the socio-political context of English colonialism.

Throughout the semester, students will be expected to be read Jane Eyre and Jean Rhys' seminal 1966 novel Wide Sargasso Sea. Rhys' novel will provide us the wider context of the novel and students will be required to read portions of the two novels regularly for class.

The two novels and other material will be provided on Moodle. Please write me at priyam.goswami.choudhury@uni-potsdam.de for questions and queries.

Climate poetry offers a unique, often highly personal and emotional angle on the pressing contemporary problems of anthropogenic climate change and climate catastrophe. By exploring both historical and contemporary anglophone perspectives from around the world, as well as their critical and cultural contexts, we will attempt to create an overview of possible critical approaches to climate poetry and its poetic, aesthetic as well as ethical and critical functions. We will use a hands-on approach that will allow you to come up with your own reading questions and interpretations for various texts, as well as work in groups to research and compile background information in preparation of our in-person meetings at the end of July. All seminar texts will be made available online. To be admitted to the block phase in July, please also make sure to attend the preparatory online meetings on 26 April and 3 May where the reading list and workload will be distributed.

Fakultative Lehrveranstaltungen

Glossar

Die folgenden Begriffserklärungen zu Prüfungsleistung, Prüfungsnebenleistung und Studienleistung gelten im Bezug auf Lehrveranstaltungen für alle Ordnungen, die seit dem WiSe 2013/14 in Kraft getreten sind.

- Prüfungsleistung Prüfungsleistungen sind benotete Leistungen innerhalb eines Moduls. Aus der Benotung der Prüfungsleistung(en) bildet sich die Modulnote, die in die Gesamtnote des Studiengangs eingeht. Handelt es sich um eine unbenotete Prüfungsleistung, so muss dieses ausdrücklich („unbenotet“) in der Modulbeschreibung der fachspezifischen Ordnung geregelt sein. Weitere Informationen, auch zu den Anmeldemöglichkeiten von Prüfungsleistungen, finden Sie unter anderem in der Kommentierung der BaMa-O
- Prüfungsnebenleistung Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind für den Abschluss eines Moduls relevante Leistungen, die – soweit sie vorgesehen sind – in der Modulbeschreibung der fachspezifischen Ordnung beschrieben sind. Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind immer unbenotet und werden lediglich mit "bestanden" bzw. "nicht bestanden" bewertet. Die Modulbeschreibung regelt, ob die Prüfungsnebenleistung eine Teilnahmevoraussetzung für eine Modulprüfung oder eine Abschlussvoraussetzung für ein ganzes Modul ist. Als Teilnahmevoraussetzung für eine Modulprüfung muss die Prüfungsnebenleistung erfolgreich vor der Anmeldung bzw. Teilnahme an der Modulprüfung erbracht worden sein. Auch für Erbringung einer Prüfungsnebenleistung wird eine Anmeldung vorausgesetzt. Diese fällt immer mit der Belegung der Lehrveranstaltung zusammen, da Prüfungsnebenleistung im Rahmen einer Lehrveranstaltungen absolviert werden. Sieht also Ihre fachspezifische Ordnung Prüfungsnebenleistungen bei Lehrveranstaltungen vor, sind diese Lehrveranstaltungen zwingend zu belegen, um die Prüfungsnebenleistung absolvieren zu können.
- Studienleistung Als Studienleistung werden Leistungen bezeichnet, die weder Prüfungsleistungen noch Prüfungsnebenleistungen sind.
